

Mitau Falls Into German Hands

40,000 AUSTRIANS FALL IN REAR GUARD ACTION AS RUSS COVER LINES OF RETREAT

Slavs Still Cling to Warsaw and Look to Allies in West to Start Big Offensive—Germans Cover 40 Miles in Four Days—Czar's Forces Extricating Themselves From Trap—Russian Torpedo Boat Sinks in Black Sea—Germans Now Hold 1,695,412 Prisoners and 190,000 Square Kilometers of Territory.

By Associated Press.

Berlin, August 2.—Mitau, the capital of the Russian province of Courland, 25 miles southwest of Riga, has been captured by German troops.

Geneva, Switzerland, via Paris, August 2.—The Geneva Tribune has published a dispatch from its correspondent at Innsbruck, Austria, who says that to the east of Warsaw the Germans have ceased their attack but to the northwest terrible fighting is still going on.

To the north of Lublin, since July 31, the Russians have been fighting a powerful rear guard action. In this vicinity the Austrians have lost no fewer than 40,000 men in the past 48 hours.

To the south of Chelm, the correspondent says, there have been constant counter attacks and the Austrians have not advanced in this section since last Saturday.

To the east of Ivangorod the Austro-Germans have advanced a distance of 40 miles in the last four days.

London, August, 2.—No direct news from Warsaw has been received here today. While there are increasing indications that Grand Duke Nicholas is withdrawing his army from the Polish salient, there is evidence that the capital still is in possession of the Russians, since Petrograd correspondents on Warsaw papers were directed to send accounts of the Dumas opening for issue there Monday morning.

That Russia has not entirely abandoned hope of a diversion in the west, which would relieve the tremendous pressure exerted upon her by the Austro-German armies, is indicated by the announcement from Petrograd that the Germans before Warsaw have been heavily reinforced from the west, thereby "creating favorable conditions for active operations by our allies."

There has been heavy fighting on the Narew front, where the Germans have made some progress in the desperate battle which is raging between the Narew and Oje rivers.

Latest reports from Vienna are that the Russians are retreating further east, pursuing German regiments having passed through Chelm.

Berlin, August 2.—A dispatch from Constantinople reports the sinking, through an unknown cause, of a large Russian torpedo boat in the Black Sea.

Paris, August 2.—A French investigation committee has submitted a further report on alleged violations of the accepted rules of warfare by German troops.

The report says the Germans killed French wounded, used French prisoners as a shield against French fire and otherwise treated their military and civilian prisoners with inhumanity.

Berlin, August 2.—The Overseas News Agency today gives the following figures, compiled by the war ministry:

Germany and Austria-Hungary occupy 29,000 square kilometers in Belgium; 21,000 in France; 130,000 in Russia, and 10,000 in French Alsace. Prisoners of war now in Germany and Austria total 1,695,412. It is estimated nearly 8,000 guns and machine guns have been captured.

NOTE ON FRYE ARRIVES TODAY

By Associated Press.

Washington, August 2.—Germany's reply to the last American note on the sinking of the American ship William P. Frye by the auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich, began to arrive today at the State Department. Time for its publication will be arranged later.

The note is understood to reiterate her contention that under the Prussian-American treaty of 1828, Germany may continue to destroy American ships carrying contraband if she pays for them.

Germany declines to accept the American contention that the treaty protects the ship from destruction and holds it is only necessary to pay damages after a prize court determines the facts. The note will be published later.

ENGLAND'S NEW NOTE ARRIVES

By Associated Press.

London, August 2.—Great Britain's supplemental note in reply to American representations on interference with neutral shipping, reached the State Department today and will be published in Wednesday morning's newspapers, with the note received last week on the same subject and a third note regarding detention of the American steamer Neches, which also arrived today.

GERMANY HAS NOT DECIDED

By Associated Press.

Berlin, August 2.—The Overseas News Agency says today: "Notwithstanding reports to the contrary, the German government has not yet decided whether the American note regarding German submarine warfare will be answered."

"The government awaits the text of the announced American note to Great Britain before deciding what further steps will be taken."

RELIEF OF HUNGRY MINERS

By Associated Press.

Columbus, August 2.—While the adjutant general's office was combing the state for jobs for idle and starving coal miners in the Hocking district and Governor Willis personally investigating the alleged illicit operations of saloons and speakeasies in that section, supplies of food and money continued today to pour in for the relief of miners and their families.

One carload of provisions was sent from Columbus and plans were being made by the people of Bucyrus to send a carload of food.

State officials today were mystified by receipt of a telegram from the state labor commissioner of Texas seeking to know if there was a demand for more miners in Ohio. The telegram said that agents were in Texas planning to ship 500 miners from there to Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia. Messages immediately were sent back advising against the shipment.

DEADLOCK IN HAITIEN CONGRESS

By Associated Press.

Washington, August 2.—The Wesleyan mission in Port Au Prince was attacked Saturday night by a mob attempting to seize a man who had murdered a prisoner in jail and had been secreted there. Rear Admiral Caperton reported the affair today but gave no details.

The city is now being controlled without difficulty. The violent revolutionary activities of last week have been followed by a political deadlock, in the efforts of the Haitien Congress to elect a president in succession to Gillaume, who was shot to death on the streets of the capital.

GERMANY WOULD AVOID ATTACKING U. S. SHIPS

By Associated Press.

Washington, August 2.—Germany's first response to the last American note on submarine warfare has come from the admiralty, which has requested that American ships have American flags painted on their sides in proportions large enough to be recognized at a distance by submarine commanders.

Many American ships are painting the national colors on their sides now but it is said they are painted too small.

The dispatch brought no comment in official quarters, but it was plain that evidence of a desire by Germany to avoid attacks on American ships was gratifying.

POLICE HANDLE FUNERAL CROWD

By Associated Press.

New York, August 2.—The funeral of Charles Becker, executed in Sing Sing Friday for instigating the murder of Herman Rosenthal, was held today from the Church of St. Nicholas, in the Bronx. So great was the crowd which filled the church and the street outside that police reserves were called out to handle it.

As a carriage filled with floral offerings was about to drive into the cemetery, uniformed employes removed a floral cross with the inscription "Sacrificed to politics," on it.

CARRANZA TO MOVE OFFICE

By Associated Press.

Washington, August 2.—Official advices today said Carranza was expected to move the seat of government from Vera Cruz to Mexico City in August.

About this time we may expect a revival of the discussion over eating too little or too much, drinking too little or too freely and all the whys and wherefores of kind, time and balanced components of a meal. The fact that the discussion returns annually with unabated vigor shows that it hasn't upset the world's dietary habits as yet.

GERMANS KEEP RUSS ON THE RUN

Capture of Cholm Officially Announced in Berlin.

MANY PRISONERS ARE TAKEN

Russians Put Up Stubborn Resistance to Teutonic Advance in Territory Between the Upper Vistula and Bug Rivers—Czar Also Loses Heavily of Guns, Ammunition and Other War Supplies.

Berlin, Aug. 2.—The capture of Cholm by German troops in pursuit of the Russians was announced officially. The official statement tells of stubborn resistance on the part of the Russian defenders between the upper Vistula and the Bug river.

The Germans on the eastern front during July captured 170,536 Russians, including 323 officers, 51 guns and 358 machine guns, according to the same statement, which covers the operations between the Pilitza and the Baltic and in the southeastern theater. The statement follows:

"North of the Niemen, local actions are reported. Northwest of Rozan we progressed farther. Counter attacks by the enemy were repulsed.

"During July we captured between the Pilitza and the Baltic 95,023 Russians, 41 guns, including two heavy pieces; four mine throwing howitzers and 230 machine guns.

"In the southeastern theater our troops are advancing across the Vistula. North of Ivangorod we repulsed heavy counter attacks by the enemy. Pursuing the Russians, we conquered the heights near Podzamoze, capturing over 1,000 prisoners.

"Between the upper Vistula and the Bug river the enemy again resisted our attacks. During the day our troops ejected the enemy from his positions near Kurow, east of Novo Aleksandria, south of Lenezna, southwest and south of Caila and southwest of Dubienska.

"The enemy continued to retreat on both banks of the Bug and on the front between the Bug and south of Lenezna. We already passed through Cholm in result of the enemy.

"In the southeastern theater the Germans captured during July 323 officers, 75,190 men, 10 guns and 128 machine guns.

"We dropped 103 bombs upon the French flying ground at Nancy. Eighteen hits upon the tents were observed. The enemy's defense machines which ascended were unable to prevent our attack. Six German aeroplanes attacked fifteen French machines at the chateau of Salins. During forty-five minutes of fighting we forced several hostile machines to land, when enemy reinforcements arrived and we retreated. There was no loss on our side. North of Saarge-lunde a French aeroplane was forced to descend and the occupants were captured."

RUSSIAN DUMA CONVENES

Members Bury Party Differences and Display Disposition to Provide Means For Supplying Army With Munitions Necessary to Continue Warfare—Amnesty Is Granted Vladimir Bourtzoff, Noted Revolutionist.

Petrograd, Aug. 2.—The first sitting of the duma holds out promise of work with the object of promoting the production of military supplies and meeting the military requirements, rather than oratory, recrimination or efforts to discover those responsible for the failure to realize the earlier high hopes.

The temper of the deputies was moderate; party differences were minimized; there was an entire absence of gloom or fictitious enthusiasm. The speeches of the president of the chamber, M. Rodzianko, and the ministers were well received and recorded with applause from both the Right and the Left. The Polish people, the allies, the ambassadors and General Ruzsky, the commander in the Galician campaign, were cheered heartily.

The outstanding feature of the session was the declaration made in the name of the emperor by the premier, M. Goremykin, that the Poles shall receive autonomy.

Announcement that amnesty had been granted Vladimir Bourtzoff, the revolutionist, who returned here from Paris for hospital service, but was immediately arrested, was well received.

The duma was opened by Imperial ukase, in the presence of a brilliant assemblage, including the cabinet ministers and the members of the diplomatic corps. M. Rodzianko, in convening the session, said the more terrible the war became the more Russia was imbued by the firm and unshakable determination to bring it to a successful issue.

"This," said M. Rodzianko, "necessitates complete unity of all classes and the development of the productive resources of the empire."

SLAVS STILL HOLD WARSAW

London, Aug. 2.—First anniversary of the outbreak of the war passed without the Germans occupying Warsaw, which was understood to be part of their program.

However, news of this climax to the Austro-German offensive in the east, which was begun in the early days of May is hourly expected, for what little information is allowed to leak through is to the effect that the Russians for several days have been withdrawing to the Brest line, leaving small forces to fight rear guard actions, so that the main armies might make good their retreat.

These rear guard actions have developed at many places into fairly large battles, as the Russians, whose steadiness has been phenomenal in the face of defeat, are offering stubborn resistance to the German advances and delivering powerful counter attacks. For example, they have prevented Field Marshal Von Hindenburg from throwing more of his troops across the Naraw; repulsed German attacks to the northwest of Warsaw, and driven back to the river some of the invading troops who crossed the Vistula to the south of Warsaw.

In the southeast Field Marshal Von Mackensen continues his victories. He has swept aside the resistance of the Russians and forced them to retreat along both banks of the Bug. The Germans have already passed through Chelm in pursuit. Thus on this front the retirement of the Warsaw armies is seriously threatened.

NOW STATED THREE AMERICANS KILLED

London, Aug. 2.—It is reported here that six members of the crew of the British steamship Iberian, torpedoed and sunk Saturday by a German submarine, were killed and six wounded. Among the killed were three Americans, Mark Wiley, a muleteer from Boston; John Carroll and a man named Sheridan. Among the wounded were also three Americans, Henry Welsh, John Brawell and Charles Hansbury.

FRENCH MARINES LAND ON HAITI

Washington, Aug. 2.—With the consent of the United States, French marines have been landed at Port au Prince, Haiti, where last week's revolution overturned the government and necessitated the landing of an expeditionary force from the United States cruiser Washington to restore order. A detachment from the cruiser Descartes is now guarding the French legation, from which President Guillaume was taken by a mob and assassinated.

A request for the guard was presented by the French minister at Port au Prince and cabled to Washington by Rear Admiral Caperton, in command of the American expeditionary force. The French minister had expressed an urgent desire that his legation be guarded by French sailors, inasmuch as the Descartes had arrived at Port au Prince. The minister thought also that the French guard would be able to lighten the burden on Admiral Caperton's 400 men to some extent.

No Cracking Tie Slips No Friction—just Pressure

EXASPERATING—ISN'T IT?

If there is any one thing that tries a man's patience and makes him irritable, it is to get a tie under a collar and then find that the tie sticks and can't be slipped or adjusted without yanking the collar, and consequently the upper part of the shirt bosom, entirely out of shape.

By our new process we so launder a collar that its top edge, where it is turned over, is not sharp, but slightly rounded and more space is given all along between the inside and the outside of the collar.

Thus, there is plenty of room for the free movement of the tie backward and forward and it is easy to adjust it to the proper position.

Why not try having a few of your collars done by our new process and note the result?

FAMINE AVERTED

Washington, Aug. 2.—Announcement of the reoccupation of Mexico City by General Gonzales' army was followed by a statement from General Carranza's headquarters at Vera Cruz that immediate efforts would be made to send foodstuffs by rail to the starving people of the capital. The state department had no direct advice as to the situation.

Heavily guarded trains, it was reported, are being prepared to leave Vera Cruz with provisions to supplement those being taken into the city by the army. Washington officials are hopeful that General Gonzales has left the railway line so well patrolled that the trains will get through with slight delay.

Reopening of the railroad will furnish an important test for the effectiveness of military operations of Carranza's forces to protect means of transportation from the east coast to the capital, officials here believe. Much depends, they say, upon the success of this undertaking, because the United States government is determined to relieve the famine in Mexico City if Carranza's forces cannot do it.

Mr. Allen's Term Ends
Last night the term of office of Mr. Frank M. Allen as County Superintendent of Schools came to an end and at the close of his service in a very difficult position it is well to call attention to the fact that the one year in which he served the people of the county was filled with accomplishments of great worth.
Mr. Allen was Fayette County's first superintendent of schools under the present law. He was chosen to take charge of the helm while the revolutionary changes, which the new law provided for, were being put into actual operation in the rural schools.
He has succeeded admirably and while the affairs of the County Board of Education and the affairs of some of the minor boards have been rather confused and confusing, and while the course of some of the controlling boards has been, at times, tempestuous it cannot be truthfully said that the actual school work suffered during the first school year under the new law. That very desirable condition may be attributed largely, if not entirely, to Mr. Allen's abilities as an organizer and instructor. Mr. Allen is one of the not too numerous "natural born" teachers. He has the ability and the enthusiasm and love for the work which insures success.
Without in any degree detracting from his successor it can be asserted that the schools of Fayette county lost a capable directing force when Mr. Allen's term of service came to an end.
The Herald wishes for Mr. Allen's successor a term of office which will be distinguished by good service and will cheerfully direct attention at its conclusion to the good that has been done.
"Well done," may be truthfully and unqualifiedly written of Mr. Allen's service at the conclusion of his term.

Three Criminal Cases
Charles Becker, formerly Lieutenant of Police of New York City, was legally executed at Sing Sing prison shortly after sunrise last Friday morning. About Becker's guilt of the charge of having instigated the murder of the gambler, Herman Rosenthal there seems to exist little doubt, but so great was the power, even though dethroned and imprisoned, of the one time "Czar of the Tenderloin," and so skillful and experienced were his paid attorneys and advocates that justice was delayed for three years. During those three years, Becker and his relatives and friends lived in the torture of uncertainty.
Becker was not only compelled to give his life in expiation of his crime but he and his friends were tortured for three long years by the false hopes which long outlived forms of law held out to them.
Harry K. Thaw, after nine years of constant endeavor, by resorting to every known technicality which the present system of legal procedure affords and aided in his endeavor by an unlimited supply of money, is today a free man, although as to his guilt of the actual murder of Stanford White there never existed any doubt.
Freed of the charge of murder by a judgment of the Court declaring him insane Thaw is now freed by a judgment of a Court of law declaring him sane.
The two cases stand out prominently as illustrating that the present form of procedure in criminal law, in its uncertainties and its delays, is neither humane nor effective.
Punishment for the commission of a crime to be effective, to be merciful and to be humane must be commensurate with the crime committed, must be swift and must be certain.
The administration of the law, especially the criminal law, should be stripped of those technicalities which provide a chance for the guilty to escape. Such technicalities oftentimes thwart justice entirely and at others hold out a false promise to the guilty which is nothing short of a torture rivaling in its effect the most fiendish inventions of the medieval inquisition.
The Becker case and the Thaw case are ended and have become a part of the history of our criminal law.
There is another case, however—a criminal prosecution—just launched which promises to furnish another illustration of the impotency of the present form of procedure.
A little more than a week ago a thousand people lost their lives when the steamship Eastland turned over and sank in the Chicago river. The great majority of victims were helpless women and children.
That some one was guilty of the murder of the thousand victims of that disaster is unquestioned. Chicago and the nation were appalled at the magnitude of the crime and demanded vengeance, demanded that those guilty of the monstrous crime be punished. A number of arrests have been made. Coroner, county grand jury and federal court investigations have been begun and already an unseemly struggle for the exclusive right to proceed is on. Another one of those controversies, having basis only in form, but which require so long to conclude that the real crime frequently goes unpunished is about the only present prospect.
A thousand human beings murdered in the heart of the second largest city of the nation and the authorities uncertain as to what tribunal is to proceed and how to proceed is tragic testimony to the inefficiency of our system of criminal procedure.

Poetry For Today
THE LONG ROAD.
We are women together—my mother and me,
With our eyes on the dull, gray past,
And the pain she knows is the pain I see,
For our ways are one at last.
Oh, the roads were rough and the sharp winds tore
As she battled fiercely ahead;
And my brain grew sick and my heart grew sore,
But I followed her whither she led.
For a mother's cry is a daughter's cry
And the load is the same hard load
And the mothers lag and the daughters fly
Till they meet on the flint-strewn road!
It was sweet to rush to her yielding breast,
But it's better to clutch her hand,
And we know our love is the love that's best—
For both of us understand.

Our Own Fables.
Once upon a Time a Wise Guy decided that he would quit playing the Ponies. So, when the Meeting opened he kept away from the Track. But to Ease Off from the Habit, he picked out seven Horses, one in each Race, and bet himself Ten Bucks on each Nag to Win. And when he picked up the Dope Sheet the next morning every one of his Selections had a Ring around it. He had picked seven straight Winners, and a Ten Dollar Parlay would have netted him just $987,654,325,867,000. So the Wise Guy patted himself on the Back and said: "I'm getting good. I am Mr. Piker from Pikersville." So his Success brought the Yen for the Ponies on again, and the Wise Guy picked seven more winners and went over to the Track and played his Seven Selections right on the Nose. And every one of the seven Also Ran.

One Man Killed In Riot at Massena, N. Y.
Albany, N. Y., Aug. 2. — Governor Whitman himself, by telephone, ordered the militia to quell strike disturbances at the aluminum cup works at Massena, St. Lawrence county. The governor received a telegram from Sheriff Thad P. Day reading: "Please order militia from Ogdensburg to come to Massena immediately on account of bad strike at the aluminum cup works. Very serious, destroying property and threatening lives."
The governor telephoned the sheriff and learned that one man had been killed and several injured and that he could not handle the situation. The governor then immediately communicated by telephone with Captain Marshall of Company K at Malone and Captain Briggs of Company D at Ogdensburg of the First National Guard Infantry, and they proceeded at once to Massena and took charge of the situation.
Lieutenant Colonel Charles Hitchcock of Binghamton was ordered to the scene of the strike, and he will relieve Major Rice, who has been handling the situation.

MR. REDFIELD STANDS PAT
Chicago, Aug. 2.—While investigation of the capsizing of the steamer Eastland rested over Sunday, divers recovered three more bodies from the wreck, making the total known dead $39.
Secretary of Commerce William C. Redfield and Solicitor A. L. Thurman promised to proceed with the investigation of steamboat inspectors according to legal requirements, despite the order of Federal Judge Landis that witnesses desired by the federal grand jury could not be heard before other investigators, and the adverse criticism that has been voiced against Secretary Redfield's inquiry.
A federal grand jury, instructed by Judge Landis to dig into every detail of the Eastland regardless of whom any finding might affect, resumed its examination of witnesses this morning.

YOUNGSTERS TAKE REFUGE IN CORN FIELDS OF PAINT

Sheriff Jones Sunday completed the work of placing three Paint township children in the County Home after a great deal of inconvenience due to the mother and the children hiding themselves from the Sheriff and his deputy.

Armed with an order committing to the county home the three children of Mrs. George Loveless, the Sheriff went to the home of Adam Huff, near Yatesville, where the mother and children were staying.

The mother and youngsters were in a nearby woodlot picking blackberries and when they spied the sheriff they scattered themselves in a cornfield, and it was not until a search of three hours had been made that the mother and two of the little fellows were found and brought to this city, the mother giving battle until she found further resistance fruitless. She was placed in the county infirmary and the two children in the county home.

The older of the three children had taken to the cornfield and made his escape. This was Saturday afternoon, and Sunday Sheriff Jones was notified that the lad was at Bookwalter. He went to that village but the boy discovered him in time to leap a fence and disappear in a corn field. After searching in vain for the boy, the sheriff returned to this city and left neighbors to keep him informed if the boy returned.

Late Sunday night word came that the boy was located, and when Sheriff Jones reached the village he was led to the home of one of the villagers and found the boy, fast asleep. It was near the midnight hour before he reached the county home with his charge.

George Loveless, father of the children, is in the State Hospital for the insane.

MONEY AND FOOD FLOOD INTO Y. M. C. A. MONDAY

More than fifty dollars in money and by check, and stocks of provisions that kept the Y. M. C. A. staff busy gathering up and storing away, flooded into the Y. M. C. A. Monday as a result of the appeal sent out by the churches of the city Sunday in behalf of the destitute and hungry families of striking Ohio miners.

A mass meeting on the court house lawn, attended by several hundred persons and addressed by the Rev. Wm. Boynton Gage from the steps of the Sharp memorial, contributed $27.50 to the collection which followed. Mr. Gage made a powerful

TORRIDITY LIFTS FOR A FEW HOURS

The intensely warm weather of the past several days lifted somewhat Sunday evening and until early Monday morning a cool wave came to refresh those suffering from the heat.

Sunday morning at six o'clock the mercury stood at 74, reaching 86 by the noon hour and 92 by two o'clock. Between two and three o'clock a cool breeze caused a drop of ten degrees. However, the mercury did not remain down any length of time and the high point shortly after three o'clock was 94 degrees.

Then came a gradual drop during the night, until three o'clock when the thermometer registered 70. By nine o'clock Monday morning the mercury was back to 80 degrees and still climbing.

LANDS BIG BASS IN NORTH FORK

Over on North Fork Robert Sanderson, enthusiastic member of the Fayette Fish and Game Association, tossed a well baited hook into a likely looking spot and instantly connected with a bass that carried the hook with the first wild dash fully fifty feet.

After a tussel, the bass was landed and over the official scales at Brown's Drug Store, the weight was 3 pounds and three and three-quarter ounces.

This weight is second in the standing in the competition for the prizes offered by the Association for the largest fish caught during the season, first place still being credited to Dr. O. D. Maddox, who weighed in a

ARRIVES IN CITY ON ANNIVERSARY

Just one year ago Sunday Prof. John D. Shoop, First Assistant Superintendent of schools in Chicago, who with his family arrived in this city Sunday evening, stood on the old battlefield of Waterloo and a few hours later was endeavoring, with thousands of other American tourists, to get out of Europe and back to America, war having been declared and the various nations of Europe thrown into a frenzy.

When he reached this city upon his return to America Prof. Shoop, in an interview with The Herald, predicted that the war would be a long and bloody one, and that it would be fought to a finish. How his predictions have been borne out up to the present time are told in letters of blood on the pages of world history.

Until the improvement is completed, which will not be for several weeks, the road will continue to be closed to all traffic, and a detour by way of the Jamestown pike or Lewis pike is necessary.

TWELFTH STORY

PROLOGUE.

With wildly shrieking horn disturbing the very solitudes of the distant hills, and with pale and terror-stricken chauffeur bending over the wheel, the limousine of David Powers, millionaire lumber king, tore through the granite gateway of his beautiful residence and dashed madly along the shrub-bordered driveway toward the marble porch.

Powers himself—tyrant boss of a thousand underfed workmen—was on the steps. Anxiety was betrayed by every line of his working features.

Perry Travis, his legal adviser, was with him, and as the machine came to a sudden stop before them, its grinding wheels sending up a shower of fine stone and gravel, Powers was seen to pause and turn an instant toward the younger man as if for support.

He had heard the piercing, clanking notes of the horn long before the machine was in sight. He knew the temper of his men. He realized that his affairs were approaching a crisis. And he was afraid—afraid with the pitiful fear which comes over strong men when they realize that the confronting danger is of their own creation.

With trembling limbs the chauffeur climbed from his seat and averted his fear-distended eyes, as with unsteady hand he pointed to the broken window pane in the door of the handsome machine. The small round hole, with its pattern of radiating cracks, told a story. Nothing but a bullet could have made a break like that.

Mastering his own emotion with supreme effort, Powers stepped toward the machine, and with firm hand—for his was a will of iron—he opened the door. From out of the luxurious interior he lifted the inert body of his beautiful daughter and pressed her to his bosom—a bosom that was racked and torn with partly stifled sobs.

Gently—gently as when she had been an infant some twenty years ago—he carried her into the house and tenderly—oh, so tenderly he placed her on a divan.

David Powers sank on one knee beside the cot, and then slowly his body seemed to shrivel and sag, much like a half-filled bag of meal, as with a complete surrender to grief he threw himself prone upon the floor and uttered the single word,

"Dead."

Travis stood silently beside the stricken father, unable to think or move. The young woman who lay there a victim to the wickedness that the tyranny of her father had stirred in the breasts of his workmen, had been his fiancée, and his sorrow was but little less than that of the agonized parent.

I.

David Powers was known as the man who never smiled during business hours. He was known as the man whose employees all feared him. He was known, too, as one of the most successful lumbermen in the business on the Pacific coast and all who knew him envied him. Stern, dominating, and with a genius for organization, he could get more work out of less men for smaller wages than any man in the state of California—that is, more than any man except one. And the man who excelled him as a driver of men, the man who could extract one more ounce of labor for one tithe less of wages was Jake Snyder, the chief foreman, pugnacious, hard as nails, flinty-hearted and entirely without sentiment.

Jake made an ideal driver for so exacting a boss as Powers. Watch him now on this morning several weeks before the shooting of Laura Powers. Watch him as he talks among the men there on the dock and on the boat. Note the feverish anxiety with which the men bend to their tasks when he glowers in their direction.

Powers had just driven up to his office in his high-powered six and had sent to Jake.

The millionaire was looking over the market column of the morning paper when his foreman entered and he never lifted his eyes from the absorbing sheet until the field commander had drawn his chair up close to his employer's desk.

There was no word of greeting between the men.

Pointing a pudgy finger first at the newspaper and then at the nose of his foreman, the millionaire spoke tersely and harshly:

"Lumber's high in the East, Jake. Drive your men to the limit and get that shipment east while prices hold up."

There was a grim cruelty in Jake's eyes and just a tinge of a smile on his firm, thin lips as he answered: "They're pretty near the limit now, but I guess we can speed 'em up a bit."

The ugly smile was still on Jake's face when he left the private office and on the steps of the building he paused for a moment, spat on his hands and squared his shoulders, as if enjoying the prospect of trouble that he scented.

And, like most of those who look for trouble, Snyder found it. He had hardly left the docks to answer Powers' summons when Karl Hurd, delegate of face and hardly strong enough for the work he had been forced to accept, staggered back, dropped the piece of lumber he was handling and almost sank to the ground from sheer weariness. Too much work and not enough food was slowly killing him, and only the thought of his wife and daughter gave him strength enough to keep up.

Several of his fellow laborers came towards him and offered to help him. They talked with discontent over conditions that forced them to submit to the treatment that Jake and Powers meted out.

At a low warning shout from one of their number, all jumped to their places and were busy at work when Jake came around the corner of the nearest lumber pile—that is, all but Hurd.

"Here you, get to work and cut out that soldiering," yelled Snyder as he bounded across the low pile in Hurd's direction.

"Get to work now, not next week," he added as Hurd was slow in responding, emphasizing the words with a vicious kick.

Sudden, swift passion seized Hurd, and careless of all consequences—thoughtless as to what the future might hold for him—he lunged fiercely at his foreman, and struck him squarely between the eyes. His was the strength of desperation and the blow sent Jake reeling against the lumber pile.

The startled shout—half of amazement and half of approval—which greeted Hurd's action, as much as the sudden impact of doubled fist against human flesh, brought him quickly to his senses, and he stood for a moment staring at his dazed persecutor as the realization of what he had done was slowly impressing itself upon him.

And then fear seized him, and turning on his heel he fled—fled as if a thousand demons were after him—fled blindly up one lumber yard alley and down the other with the enraged Snyder, who had quickly recovered, dashing madly after him.

"Stop or I fire," yelled Jake, and then his revolver spoke—not once but three times in rapid succession, the vicious fire and the snipping bullets adding to the pandemonium that reigned in the lumber yard.

But Hurd fled blindly on.

Stumbling, plunging, falling and rising again, he raced across the rough, uneven ground, and reached the railroad tracks just as the interurban trolley bound for San Pedro whirled into view. With his last remaining ounce of strength, he made a desperate spurt and flung himself headlong on to the front platform of the rushing trolley. That he escaped death beneath the wheels was a miracle.

For just an instant Hurd lay prone upon the platform and then slowly drew himself up to a standing position. He was too relieved at his escape from immediate danger to give much thought to the fact that his job was probably gone—that he was out of employment. That a realization of his full plight would have come to him soon is possible, had not a sudden commotion in the interior of the car attracted his attention. Glancing through the glass door, he noticed Jake, the smoking revolver still in his hand, advancing along the center aisle of the car. His face was working angrily and every line of his ugly countenance cried out for revenge. He had been close upon Hurd's heels in the mad race and a duplicate of the wild lunge that landed Hurd on the front platform had catapulted him on to the back one.

The Powers lumber yard lay in low ground just east of the trolley right of way, and at the instant that Hurd, glancing into the interior of the car, saw his pursuer advancing upon him, the car was swiftly moving onto a trestle that carried the trolley high into the air, over the lumber yard, and on toward the city.

It was a time for quick action, and Hurd was equal to the emergency. With a new strength born of his momentary respite, Karl gathered himself together for a spring, and murmuring a prayer for safety, he hurled himself fiercely from the swiftly moving trolley and landed on top of a towering lumber pile. As he lay winded and panting on top of the rude skyscraper, he saw Jake carried swiftly past him on the dashing trolley, shaking his fist at his escaped quarry in impotent rage.

Slowly, his fingers gripping desperately at the projecting boards, his feet unsteady and his head swimming, Hurd climbed down the side of the lumber pile that had been his temporary haven. It seemed ages before he reached the ground.

And then he came face to face with Snyder.

Like wild beasts the men glared at each other.

Slowly, cautiously they approached. Snyder's attitude was eager, expectant, Hurd's was desperate. Snyder swung his rude weapon easily, holding it ready. Hurd's fists were doubled. The two men closed.

Snyder, his intended blow blocked for the moment, found himself borne backward by the fierce rush of the other. He struggled with a determination worthy of a better cause. And his superior strength soon told.

Straining and panting he slowly forced Hurd to release his grip, and, shoving his opponent from him, he suddenly, with the swiftness of a man trained to such warfare, raised his club and sent it crashing down upon the skull of the underfed and poorly nourished stevedore.

Hurd dropped like a stone. He was done.

II.

"Wait until my birthday, Perry—it's only four months—and then perhaps—"

Laura Powers had gently withdrawn her soft white hand from the more masculine ones of Perry Travis and had gazed dreamily out across the well trimmed lawns and beautiful gardens.

She was happy and pampered and indulged. She had revealed in a father's love—a love that amounted almost to worship. And now she knew that she had gained another man's love—the love of a man who was worthy and had her father's approval.

Small wonder that the days had flown swiftly. Small wonder that time had taken unto itself wings. And now her birthday was here. Already the guests were assembling. Already Perry was at the house, eager and impatient for his answer. And even yet Laura sometimes wondered just what that answer would be.

And Laura, while entering into the gaiety about her, yet found her mind frequently wandering away from her surroundings; found herself constantly trying to concentrate on the answer she was so soon to give Perry.

And then he came to greet her. Long and fondly he gazed into her eyes and unconscious of her surroundings she let him hold her hand longer than was strictly necessary.

Quietly her father stepped up to where they stood.

"Friends," he said, "I wish to announce the engagement of my daughter Laura to Perry Travis."

The confused laugh and the pretty blushes that mantled her cheek, chasing themselves in telltale profusion up to the very roots of her wavy hair, were enough to tell those present that her father's words had not displeased her. Perry had his answer.

Just then, as if the fates were loth that happiness should reign supreme, there came an interruption. While the guests were crowding up and about Laura, the women kissing her and the men showering congratulations upon her, the servants were trying to keep a committee of workmen from entering at the gate.

Tim Shand was at their head—Tim the fiery—Tim the eloquent. For weeks now the men had been on strike. For weeks there had been turmoil and strife. For weeks there had been starvation in the homes of the strikers and destitution among the children of the workmen. Ever since the trouble between Snyder and Hurd the discontent of the men had grown. And then had come the last straw—the order given by Powers and enforced by Snyder—an order, working the men an hour longer each day and all day Sunday without extra pay. Even Snyder, tyrannical as he was known to be, had protested slightly at the latest outrage.

"The men'll never stand it," he had said.

"Times are hard and it must be done," Powers had answered.

"The men will strike," Snyder had ventured.

"Then we will get others," the millionaire had answered.

And so, going from group to group, Snyder had driven them harder, had shouted the new orders at them, had sought to coerce them into submission by a volley of filthy oaths.

Even the worm will turn, they say, and hungry, underpaid stevedores are less patient than the earth-grubbing insect. There were murmurs at Snyder's orders and open rebellion at his language. Just how it started nobody seemed to know; just who began it doesn't matter. Suffice to say that leaderless as the men were, impelled by a common instinct, they had suddenly rushed the rough-tongued foreman and had thrown him off the deck into the water. Then had come the march to the office, the demand for better pay, the clanging of the fence. He hadn't the strength of a half-grown boy.

So intently were the men watching each other that neither had heard the approach of Powers and his prospective son-in-law.

"What's the meaning of all this?" the latter asked.

"Please, Mr. Powers, I've come back to work. I've been laid up. I was hurt you know."

Recognition showed in the face of Travis.

"He's the man who assaulted Snyder," he said, turning towards the millionaire.

"You—you thug!" thundered Powers.

"You can't work here. We have no place for disturbers like you. Get out."

Perhaps it was because of the anger aroused by his resentment against Hurd, perhaps it was because the increasing extravagances of Laura made him desperate to increase his income, perhaps it was only because of pure cussedness, but at any rate Powers went straight from his encounter with his old employee at the gate to his office, sent for his worthy foreman, and issued the Sunday work order that caused the strike and filled hundreds of homes with want and poverty and starvation. And all during the weary weeks of the unequal struggle between capital and labor Mina Hurd lay slowly dying, while her husband sat helplessly by, subsisting on the charity of friends and buying medicine with the money Doctor Gray forced upon him.

IV.

If Laura Powers had been less thoughtless—less selfish—if she had taken an interest in the condition of her father's employees before the afternoon of her interrupted Colonial party, this tale of hardship and privation, this story of tyranny and toil might never have been written.

The day after the party found her starting out alone on a mission of charity and exploration. All night long the word, "starving" had been ringing in her brain, and she meant to find out for herself if the wives and children of her father's striking employees were really suffering.

And now driving slowly through the streets formed by the cottages of her father's men, she gazed with sickening heart at the signs of misery and distress that multiplied on every hand around her.

One particularly pretty child, sobbing as if her little heart would break, attracted Laura's attention.

"And what is your name, my darling?" she asked tenderly.

"Betty Hurd," sobbed the child.

"And why are you crying?"

"My mamma's gone."

And following the persistent tug of the little one's hand Laura suffered herself to be led into Karl Hurd's house of sorrow and anguish; suffered herself to be led to the bedroom where the stricken husband, stunned by grief, sat staring down into the cold and sightless eyes of the wife who had offered herself on the altar of toil and tyranny.

Laura stooped to the little child, and gathering her in her arms she sought to give her some of that mother comfort she would never know again. Yielding to an impulse she opened her purse and poured its contents into the hand of the little one.

Easily influenced as children are, Betty grabbed the money from Laura's hand and running gayly to her father's side she tugged at his sleeve and lisped in her childish prattle:

"See what the lady gave me."

Dully Karl raised his pain-laden eyes and gazed dumbly at the pretty benefactor who stood at the foot of the bed in sorrowing embarrassment. Mutely he nodded his dumb thanks.

"I will be back to do what I can later," And Laura, sobered and chastened by what she had seen, slowly left that house of sorrow. But her unpleasant experiences were only beginning. Pandemonium reigned at the house three doors away—the house of Tim Shand—aggressive Tim Shand, champion of the men and the spokesman of the committee that had bearded Powers in his own home at the Colonial party the day before.

Furniture was piled high on the sidewalk and men wearing the badges of the sheriff's office were carrying more of it into the street despite the violent protests of the wildly disheveled Mrs. Shand.

Laura's interest was aroused, less by the spectacle itself than by the fact, that Perry Travis, her fiancée and her father's legal adviser, was directing the work of the despoilers.

"And what does this mean, Perry?" she demanded in tones that compelled a prompt reply.

"These men are strikers. They must go. They won't work. We need the houses for others who will." His reply was jerky and stilted.

"But I thought these people had paid for their homes out of their wages," she persisted.

He remained silent, both to her question and to the insistent demands of Mrs. Shand, whose excitement and hysteria were growing with each passing moment.

"Answer me!" and Laura stamped her pretty foot in anger.

"They are only partly paid for." The answer came slowly. "They are only partly paid for, and as they remain in your father's possession until entirely cleared, and as the men are earning no money and cannot continue payment, we are foreclosing the mortgages. That is all."

"So you rob them of their homes. For shame. I'll stop that." And Laura, showing indignation in every pose of her dainty little body, hurried away to find her father.

A new and surly gateman barred the way.

And he tried to force his way past the surly billy. The scuffle was short and decisive. Hurd was thrown, limp and panting, up against the fence. He hadn't the strength of a half-grown boy.

So intently were the men watching each other that neither had heard the approach of Powers and his prospective son-in-law.

An hour passed—an hour freighted with frightful portent for the actors in the tragedy of toil and tyranny that is rapidly nearing its final curtain. In that hour Laura had found her father, and with arms around his neck had begged him to have mercy. "You must take pity on your poor toilers, father," she had pleaded, and he had laughingly put her off. In that hour Mrs. Shand had stormed the meeting of the strikers in the vacant lot and had, in an impassioned plea of crude eloquence, lashed them into a fury for revenge. In that hour Karl Hurd, a vow for vengeance in his soul had left the body of his dead wife and gone to join the maddened strikers.

Though he did not yet realize it, David Powers, for the first time in his life, had reached a point where events were getting beyond his control. A higher hand than his was dealing the cards. Fate had taken part in the game. And so it happened at the very moment that his daughter Laura had decided to slip from the house and go down herself and help the stricken families of her father's employees, the strikers themselves had decided to hold up her father's auto and give him the beating up they felt he so richly deserved.

Skillfully Shand disposed his force at a point of vantage in a turn of the road just beyond the Powers mansion. The men were armed with clubs and at a point in the boulevard where they were hidden until the auto was almost upon them, logs were thrown across the highway. Hurd vaulted to act as lookout, and Shand, not knowing that the half-crazed and sorely stricken man had craftily stole the revolver from his own side pocket, accepted his services. "Go up the gate and signal us when the auto starts!" were his final instructions. And so the stage was set.

Slowly the limousine drew out from the Powers estate. The millionaire had drawn the shades to protect himself from the insults and gibes of the men on the streets and Laura had no bothered to raise them. Out on to the road the machine swung and had just gathered full momentum when the chauffeur's heart was turned to stone by the orange tongue of flame that leaped from behind the trunk of the tree, by the ringing shot of a well aimed gun, by the crash of glass, the body of the car behind him, and the mad maniacal peal of laughter that echoed wildly through the afternoon air. As he brought the auto to a quick turn he caught one glimpse of a pair of strangely staring, unblinking eyes that peered at him from behind the trunk of the grand old tree at the roadside.

David Powers was an influential man in the community where he lived. Police had guarded his palatial home all during the strike. They were not at hand when the shooting took place. And so it happened that the exultant grinning murderer was quickly caught and was dragged into Powers' library while the agonized millionaire, still the first burst of his awful grief, bending over the cold, dead form of his beautiful martyred daughter.

"Do with me what you will. I have had my revenge! The world has less tyrant to oppress it," Hurd cried. And then his eyes fell upon

Englewood, N. J., Aug. 2.—Abraham
Cornelius, Jr., for many years cashier of the Citizens' National bank, a married man with a family; Miss Loretta Adelga, an attractive young stenographer, formerly employed in the bank, and $11,000 in cash from the bank's vault have been missing since Wednesday afternoon. There is no tangible evidence to show that Cornelius and the girl, for whom he is said to have had an infatuation for several years, have disappeared together, but Clinton H. Blake, president of the bank, and the girl's heartbroken mother, a widow, attach important significance to the fact that each vanished from Englewood about the same time.

Cornelius finished work at the bank
as usual late Wednesday afternoon and boarded a trolley for New York.
One of the bank's directors sat in the same seat with him and they chatted freely all the way.

The cashier said he intended to do some shopping in the city. Friday morning President Blake made certain of Cornelius' disappearance and the loss of $11,000 of the bank's money. It was then learned that the cashier had not returned from his 'shopping' trip and that neither his family nor friends had seen him for several days.

Meanwhile the Englewood board of trade had been trying to trace the whereabouts of Miss Adelga, the bank's stenographer. She had been employed three weeks ago at the earnest solicitation of Cornelius. On Wednesday afternoon she asked to leave the office early, as she had an engagement in New York. Then she sent a telegram to her mother at Rochelle Park saying the board would meet late Wednesday night and she would stay in Englewood with friends.
The board had no meeting at all that night and the girl did not appear at her desk on Thursday morning. Her mother admitted her disappearance from home.

New York, Aug. 2.—The report from Omaha that Colonel Roosevelt and his party are rushing east on account of the illness of his wife was discredited at the Roosevelt home at Oyster Bay.
Mrs. Richard Derby, daughter of Colonel and Mrs. Roosevelt, who is at the Oyster Bay place, stated over the telephone that there is nothing sudden about the return of the Roosevelt party.

New York, Aug. 2.—Branches of the League to Enforce Peace will be formed in all the countries of Europe, including those at war, according to an announcement by the committee of information of the league. To that end, says the announcement, a committee of foreign organizations has been formed with Theodore Marburg, former American minister to Belgium, as chairman. This committee already has begun negotiations with a group of men in Great Britain, headed by Lord Bryce, and it is stated after the British branch has been organized others will be established in France,
Holland and Italy.

New York, Aug. 2.—The beautiful coffee colored statue of Aphrodite that is supposed to have been chiseled by the famous Praxiteles in 2200 B. C. has been bought by John D. Rockefeller for $75,000 and will occupy a pedestal in the new Temple of Love on the Rockefeller estate at Pocantico Hills. The pedestal is in the center of the temple, that cost $250,000, and has been empty since the completion of the temple for lack of a statue fitting to grace the place of honor.

PLATE IS REMOVED

New York, Aug. 2.—Police officers of high rank held a conference at police headquarters and then, on their own initiative, went to the darkened room where the body of Charles Becker, who was put to death Friday morning for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, lay in a coffin, and removed from the coffin lid the small silver plate inscribed, "Charles Becker, murdered July 30, 1915, by Gov. Whitman."

Mrs. Becker did not interfere when the police officials told her that they intended to take the silver plate from coffin lid. The plate was brought down to police headquarters and locked in a desk. It will be kept there in case it is needed at any time as an exhibit in whatever legal action may or may not be contemplated. Inspector Faurot refused to discuss the removal of the plate at all, but from an authoritative source it was learned that the police had taken possession of the plate without prompting of any kind from Albany.

GOVERNMENT IS GUARDING LIVES AMERICAN BABIES

(Prepared by the Children's Bureau, U. S. Department of Labor).

Washington, D. C., Aug. 2.—At this time of the year the trains and boats are carrying thousands of families to the seashore, the mountains, or the farms for their annual vacation from the hot and crowded cities.

Among the host of travelers are many young children. Indeed, it is chiefly on account of them that parents are willing to take all the trouble involved in the annual summer pilgrimage, the weariness of the journey and the many inconveniences of a temporary home.

They are, however, usually repaid by the increased health of the children and in the early weeks of September the trains are again filled with returning families of happy children whose sunburned cheeks, arms and legs, and irrepressible spirits show what tonic lingers in mountainside or country places.

Unfortunately, this is not always the case. Whether or not this change from city to country life is to be altogether beneficial or not depends upon the sort of living conditions into which the children will come, and upon the character of the milk supply and the drinking water.

In most cities, mothers, whether poor or rich, may have the benefit of carefully inspected milk and drinking water. In the country, it is a wise precaution to look into these matters before selecting the summer home. Flies and mosquitoes are two great enemies of the baby, affecting not merely his comfort, but endangering his health, and possibly his life. In going to the country, the mother should select, if possible, a place where the doors and windows and the porches are screened and one where water closets or some form of sanitary privy is in use. The latter improvements are not, necessarily, very expensive, and should be provided.

The prudent mother will include a bolt of cotton netting in the outfit she takes to the country in order that the baby's crib, at least, may be protected from insects.

In going to a new place with a baby all the drinking water, and the milk, also, should be boiled, if from a strange supply about the cleanliness of which the mother knows nothing.

To travel comfortably with a baby, the first thing to be considered is his food. If the baby is breast fed no trouble will be experienced. For a bottle baby enough feeding must be prepared at home to last throughout the entire journey, unless the trip takes longer than twenty-four hours. It is best to sterilize the milk for this purpose as follows:

Stand the filled bottles in a kettle over the fire and let the water boil about them for an hour and a half. After boiling, the bottles should be gradually cooled, and then made as cold as possible by standing them in a pail of cracked ice. They may then be packed in a small portable refrigerator. Many types of these have been devised and may be purchased. A portable ice-box may be made at home as follows:

Use two covered tin pails, one an inch or two smaller than the other, so that it may stand inside the larger pail. Fill the space between the two with sawdust; put the bottles with cracked ice in the inner pail and cover both tightly, and make a canvas or flannel cover for the whole.

To warm the bottle for the baby, the mother should provide herself with an enamelled ware pitcher holding a pint, which the porter will fill with warm water from the dining car. Set the bottle in it, after the water has cooled a little so that the sudden heat will not be sufficient to break the bottle.

The next most troublesome question on a long journey with a baby is how to take care of the diapers. A separate bag or basket lined with rubber sheeting should be provided for them, and with them may be packed a small enamelled ware chamber.

For a young baby a number of inner pads of soft paper or old cloth which can be destroyed should be provided. When one of these is soiled, wrap it up tightly in newspaper and throw it away. Wet diapers may be tightly rolled and kept in the rubber bag.

The two most common mistakes made in traveling with children are with respect to their clothes and their food. In the hot summer weather, for a long journey, the little child should be dressed only in the sleeveless gauze shirt and diaper, with one thin outer garment. A sleeveless, low-necked slip of white chieftan silk is best, since it is much cooler than cotton, sheds the dust and can be washed out in the basin when soiled.

It is well to change the baby's clothing as soon as the journey begins, in order to have the regular outfit clean to put on when leaving the train. The little baby may go barefooted but an older child should have barefoot sandals to protect the feet from the cinders scattered over the floor.

Mothers should observe the same regular hours for feeding their children as at home. One of the worst things she can do is to give the baby

FIRST SESSION OF INSTITUTE DRAWS FULLY 100 TEACHERS

The annual institute of the Fayette County Teachers' Association opened very auspiciously Monday morning, with approximately 60 of Fayette county's 160 teachers enrolled for the first session.

The two instructors, Prof. Frank B. Pearson, of the State Department and Prof. Geoffrey F. Morgan, of Ohio University, were present, and following the devotional exercises Prof. Pearson addressed the teachers on "Discipline," giving them a practical talk upon the very vital subject. Prof. Pearson's definition for discipline was in "making situations such that the child through his own initiative will live up to the best that is in him."

Prof. Morgan followed Prof. Pearson with a most comprehensive discussion of "The Old and New Curriculum," and he convinced his audience that it was most essential for the curriculum to keep pace with changed conditions—that there was no reason for holding to a curriculum that was "out-of-date" or behind the times, and it was effort wasted to do so.

Both instructors spoke with enthusiasm which created a splendid spirit among the teachers, and a decidedly successful institute is forecasted by the opening sessions.

Prof. Pearson was the first speaker of the afternoon session, and his lecture was on the "Three Definitions." Both speakers have a splendid series of lectures, showing careful preparation and calculated to be of inestimable value to the teachers who hear them.

An increased attendance is predicted for Thursday and the remainder of the week.

There was little actual excitement. Linson and Otey both pitched masterful ball and the game progressed throughout in "one-two-three" order.

Linson allowed but two hits, passed two and struck out ten men; Otey passed two, struck out four and allowed six hits.

Hungeling, prize backstop of the Athletics, bought admittance to Slugger's Hall with a long three bagger in the eighth. This was Hung's first real strong bid for swatting honors.

Shortstop Shank was the stellar performer with the Shamrocks. His work was unusual.

Ninety degrees of temperature did not allow of much pep on either side but there was little slumber. Duplicating their performance of the last Wilmington game, the Athletics went through without an error. Dayton had but two.

Ross umpired without criticism. The decrease in attendance put the Athletics about twenty dollars in the hole.

The faithful fans were well pleased with the Shamrocks who will probably be brought back before the close of the season.

As it now lines up, it is generally conceded that Washington has the best ball team in its history and a little support from the fans will keep it right there.

The Athletics play the rub at Wilmington next Sunday. The box score of Sunday's game follows:

Mitau Falls Into German Hands

40,000 AUSTRIANS FALL IN REAR GUARD ACTION AS RUSS COVER LINES OF RETREAT

Slavs Still Cling to Warsaw and Look to Allies in West to Start Big Offensive—Germans Cover 40 Miles in Four Days—Czar's Forces Extricating Themselves From Trap—Russian Torpedo Boat Sinks in Black Sea—Germans Now Hold 1,695,412 Prisoners and 190,000 Square Kilometers of Territory.

By Associated Press.

Berlin, August 2.—Mitau, the capital of the Russian province of Courland, 25 miles southwest of Riga, has been captured by German troops.

Geneva, Switzerland, via Paris, August 2.—The Geneva Tribune has published a dispatch from its correspondent at Innsbruck, Austria, who says that to the east of Warsaw the Germans have ceased their attack but to the northwest terrible fighting is still going on.

To the north of Lublin, since July 31, the Russians have been fighting a powerful rear guard action. In this vicinity the Austrians have lost no fewer than 40,000 men in the past 48 hours.

To the south of Chelm, the correspondent says, there have been constant counter attacks and the Austrians have not advanced in this section since last Saturday.

To the east of Ivgorod the Austro-Germans have advanced a distance of 40 miles in the last four days.

London, August, 2.—No direct news from Warsaw has been received here today. While there are increasing indications that Grand Duke Nicholas is withdrawing his army from the Polish salient, there is evidence that the capital still is in possession of the Russians, since Petrograd correspondents on Warsaw papers were directed to send accounts of the Dumas opening for issue there Monday morning.

That Russia has not entirely abandoned hope of a diversion in the west, which would relieve the tremendous pressure exerted upon her by the Austro-German armies, is indicated by the announcement from Petrograd that the Germans before Warsaw have been heavily reinforced from the west, thereby "creating favorable conditions for active operations by our allies."

There has been heavy fighting on the Narew front, where the Germans have made some progress in the desperate battle which is raging between the Narew and Oje rivers.

Latest reports from Vienna are that the Russians are retreating further east, pursuing German regiments having passed through Chelm.

Berlin, August 2.—A dispatch from Constantinople reports the sinking, through an unknown cause, of a large Russian torpedo boat in the Black Sea.

Paris, August 2.—A French investigation committee has submitted a further report on alleged violations of the accepted rules of warfare by German troops.

The report says the Germans killed French wounded, used French prisoners as a shield against French fire and otherwise treated their military and civilian prisoners with inhumanity.

Berlin, August 2.—The Overseas News Agency today gives the following figures, compiled by the war ministry:

Germany and Austria-Hungary occupy 29,000 square kilometers in Belgium; 21,000 in France; 130,000 in Russia, and 10,000 in French Alsace. Prisoners of war now in Germany and Austria total 1,695,412. It is estimated nearly 8,000 guns and machine guns have been captured.

NOTE ON FRYE ARRIVES TODAY

By Associated Press.

Washington, August 2.—Germany's reply to the last American note on the sinking of the American ship William P. Frye by the auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich, began to arrive today at the State Department. Time for its publication will be arranged later.

The note is understood to reiterate her contention that under the Prussian-American treaty of 1828, Germany may continue to destroy American ships carrying contraband if she pays for them.

Germany declines to accept the American contention that the treaty protects the ship from destruction and holds it is only necessary to pay damages after a prize court determines the facts. The note will be published later.

ENGLAND'S NEW NOTE ARRIVES

By Associated Press.

London, August 2.—Great Britain's supplemental note in reply to American representations on interference with neutral shipping, reached the State Department today and will be published in Wednesday morning's newspapers, with the note received last week on the same subject and a third note regarding detention of the American steamer Neches, which also arrived today.

GERMANY HAS NOT DECIDED

By Associated Press.

Berlin, August 2.—The Overseas News Agency says today:

"Notwithstanding reports, to the contrary, the German government has not yet decided whether the American note regarding German submarine warfare will be answered.

"The government awaits the text of the announced American note to Great Britain before deciding what further steps will be taken.

RELIEF OF HUNGRY MINERS

By Associated Press.

Columbus, August 2.—While the adjutant general's office was combing the state for jobs for idle and starving coal miners in the Hocking district and Governor Willis personally investigating the alleged illicit operations of saloons and speakeasies in that section, supplies of food and money continued today to pour in for the relief of miners and their families.

One carload of provisions was sent from Columbus and plans were being made by the people of Bucyrus to send a carload of food.

State officials today were mystified by receipt of a telegram from the state labor commissioner of Texas seeking to know if there was a demand for more miners in Ohio. The telegram said that agents were in Texas planning to ship 500 miners from there to Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia. Messages immediately were sent back advising against the shipment.

DEADLOCK IN HAITIEN CONGRESS

By Associated Press.

Washington, August 2.—The Wesleyan mission in Port Au Prince was attacked Saturday night by a mob attempting to seize a man who had murdered a prisoner in jail and had been secreted there. Rear Admiral Caperton reported the affair today but gave no details.

The city is now being controlled without difficulty. The violent revolutionary activities of last week have been followed by a political deadlock, in the efforts of the Haitien Congress to elect a president in succession to Gillaume, who was shot to death on the streets of the capital.

GERMANY WOULD AVOID ATTACKING U. S. SHIPS

By Associated Press.

Washington, August 2.—Germany's first response to the last American note on submarine warfare has come from the admiralty, which has requested that American ships have American flags painted on their sides in proportions large enough to be recognized at a distance by subma-retary into the river" and was signed "Murderer."

The other was signed "Republican," and advised Mr. Redfield to leave the city immediately for fear some crank would kill him. Secretary Redfield said, "they are idle threats and mean nothing."

Captain Pedersen of the Eastland was released on $10,000 bail today.

Many American ships are painting the national colors on their sides now but it is said they are painted too small.

The dispatch brought no comment in official quarters, but it was plain that evidence of a desire by Germany to avoid attacks on American ships was gratifying.

New York, August 2.—The funeral of Charles Becker, executed in Sing Sing Friday for instigating the murder of Herman Rosenthal, was held today from the Church of St. Nicholas, in the Bronx. GERMANS KEEP RUSS ON THE RUN

Capture of Cholm Officially Announced in Berlin.

MANY PRISONERS ARE TAKEN

Russians Put Up Stubborn Resistance to Teutonic Advance in Territory Between the Upper Vistula and Bug Rivers—Czar Also Loses Heavily of Guns, Ammunition and Other War Supplies.

Berlin, Aug. 2.—The capture of Cholm by German troops in pursuit of the Russians was announced officially. The official statement tells of stubborn resistance on the part of the Russian defenders between the upper Vistula and the Bug river.

The Germans on the eastern front during July captured 170,536 Russians, including 323 officers, 51 guns and 358 machine guns, according to the same statement, which covers the operations between the Pilitza and the Baltic and in the southeastern theater. The statement follows:

"North of the Niemen, local actions are reported. Northwest of Rozan we progressed farther. Counter attacks by the enemy were repulsed.

"During July we captured between the Pilitza and the Baltic 95,023 Russians, 41 guns, including two heavy pieces; four mine throwing howitzers and 230 machine guns.

"In the southeastern theater our troops are advancing across the Vistula. North of Ivangorod we repulsed heavy counter attacks by the enemy. Pursuing the Russians, we conquered the heights near Podzamoz, capturing over 1,000 prisoners.

"Between the upper Vistula and the Bug river the enemy again resisted our attacks. During the day our troops ejected the enemy from his positions near Kurow, east of Novo Alexandrja, south of Leuzna, southwest and south of Challa and southwest of Dubienska.

"The enemy continued to retreat on both banks of the Bug and on the front between the Bug and south of Leuzna. We already passed through Cholm in result of the enemy."

"In the southeastern theater the Germans captured during July 323 officers, 75,190 men, 10 guns and 128 machine guns."

"We dropped 103 bombs upon the French flying ground at Nancy. Eighteen hits upon the tents were observed. The enemy's defense machines which ascended were unable to prevent our attack. Six German aeroplanes attacked fifteen French machines at the chateau of Salins. During forty-five minutes of fighting we forced several hostile machines to land, when enemy reinforcements arrived and we retreated. There was no loss on our side. North of Saargunde a French aeroplane was forced to descend and the occupants were captured."

RUSSIAN DUMA CONVENES

Members Bury Party Differences and Display Disposition to Provide Means For Supplying Army With Munitions Necessary to Continue Warfare—Amnesty Is Granted Vladimir Bourtzeff, Noted Revolutionist.

Petrograd, Aug. 2.—The first sitting of the duma holds out promise of work with the object of promoting the production of military supplies and meeting the military requirements, rather than oratory, recrimination or efforts to discover those responsible for the failure to realize the earlier high hopes.

The temper of the deputies was moderate; party differences were minimized; there was an entire absence of gloom or fictitious enthusiasm. The speeches of the president of the chamber, M. Rodzianko, and the ministers were well received and recorded with applause from both the Right and the Left. The Polish people, the allies, the ambassadors and General Ruzsky, the commander in the Galician campaign, were cheered heartily.

The outstanding feature of the session was the declaration made in the name of the emperor by the premier, M. Goremykin, that the Poles shall receive autonomy.

Announcement that amnesty had been granted Vladimir Bourtzeff, the revolutionist, who returned here from Paris for hospital service, but was immediately arrested, was well received. The duma was opened by imperial ukase, in the presence of a brilliant assemblage, including the cabinet ministers and the members of the diplomatic corps. M. Rodzianko, in convening the session, said the more terrible the war became the more Russia was imbued by the firm and unshakable determination to bring it to a successful issue.

"This," said M. Rodzianko, "necessitates complete unity of all classes and the development of the productive resources of the empire."

SLAVS STILL HOLD WARSAW

London, Aug. 2.—First anniversary of the outbreak of the war passed without the Germans occupying Warsaw, which was understood to be part of their program.

However, news of this climax to the Austro-German offensive in the east, which was begun in the early days of May is hourly expected, for what little information is allowed to leak through is to the effect that the Russians for several days have been withdrawing to the Brest line, leaving small forces to fight rear guard actions, so that the main armies might make good their retreat.

These rear guard actions have developed at many places into fairly large battles, as the Russians, whose steadiness has been phenomenal in the face of defeat, are offering stubborn resistance to the German advances and delivering powerful counter attacks. For example, they have prevented Field Marshal Von Hindenburg from advancing.

pure iron throwing more of his troops across the Narw; repulsed German attacks to the northwest of Warsaw, and driven back to the river some of the invading troops who crossed the Vistula to the south of Warsaw.

In the southeast Field Marshal Von Mackensen continues his victories. He has swept aside the resistance of the Russians and forced them to retreat along both banks of the Bug. The Germans have already passed through Chelm in pursuit. Thus on this front the retirement of the Warsaw armies is seriously threatened.

NOW STATED THREE AMERICANS KILLED

London, Aug. 2.—It is reported here that six members of the crew of the British steamship Iberian, torpedoed and sunk Saturday by a German submarine, were killed and six wounded. Among the killed were three Americans, Mark Wiley, a muleteer from Boston; Joan Carroll and a man named Sheridan. Among the wounded were also three Americans, Henry Welsh, John Brawell and Charles Hansbury.

FRENCH MARINES LAND ON HAITI

Washington, Aug. 2.—With the consent of the United States, French marines have been landed at Port au Prince, Haiti, where last week's revolution overturned the government and necessitated the landing of an expeditionary force from the United States cruiser Washington to restore order. A detachment from the cruiser Descartes is now guarding the French legation, from which President Guillaume was taken by a mob and assassinated.

A request for the guard was presented by the French minister at Port au Prince and cabled to Washington by Rear Admiral Caperton, in command of the American expeditionary force. The French minister had expressed an urgent desire that his legation be guarded by French sailors, inasmuch as the Descartes had arrived at Port au Prince. The minister thought also that the French guard would be able to lighten the burden on Admiral Caperton's 400 men to some extent.

No Cracking Tie Slips No Friction—just Pressure

EXASPERATING—ISN'T IT?

If there is any one thing that tries a man's patience and makes him irritable, it is to get a tie under a collar and then find that the tie sticks and can't be slipped or adjusted without yanking the collar, and consequently the upper part of the shirt bosom, entirely out of shape.

By our new process we so launder a collar that its top edge, where it is turned over, is not sharp, but slightly rounded and more space is given all along between the inside and the outside of the collar.

Thus, there is plenty of room for the free movement of the tie backward and forward and it is easy to adjust it to the proper position.

Why not try having a few of your collars done by our new process and note the result?

Telephone and our driver will call. You are cordially invited to visit and inspect our sanitary plant and see this machine in operation.

FAMINE AVERTED

Washington, Aug. 2.—Announcement of the reoccupation of Mexico City by General Gonzales' army was followed by a statement from General Carranza's headquarters at Vera Cruz that immediate efforts would be made to send foodstuffs by rail to the starving people of the capital. The state department had no direct advice as to the situation.

Heavily guarded trains, it was reported, are being prepared to leave Vera Cruz with provisions to supplement those being taken into the city by the army. Washington officials are hopeful that General Gonzales has left the railway line so well patrolled that the trains will get through with slight delay.

Reopening of the railroad will furnish an important test for the effectiveness of military operations of Carranza's forces to protect means of transportation from the east coast to the capital, officials here believe. Much depends, they say, upon the success of this undertaking, because the United States government is determined to relieve the famine in Mexico City if Carranza's forces cannot do it.

Mr. Allen's Term Ends

Last night the term of office of Mr. Frank M. Allen as County Superintendent of Schools came to an end and at the close of his service in a very difficult position it is well to call attention to the fact that the one year in which he served the people of the county was filled with accomplishments of real worth.

Mr. Allen was Fayette County's first superintendent of schools under the present law. He was chosen to take charge of the helm while the revolutionary changes, which the new law provided for, were being put into actual operation in the rural schools.

He has succeeded admirably and while the affairs of the County Board of Education and the affairs of some of the minor boards have been rather confused and confusing, and while the course of some of the controlling boards has been, at times, tempestuous it cannot be truthfully said that the actual school work suffered during the first school year under the new law. That very desirable condition may be attributed largely, if not entirely, to Mr. Allen's abilities as an organizer and instructor. Mr. Allen is one of the not too numerous "natural born" teachers. He has the ability and the enthusiasm and love for the work which insures success.

Without in any degree distracting from his successor it can be asserted that the schools of Fayette county lost a capable directing force when Mr. Allen's term of service came to an end.

The Herald wishes for Mr. Allen's successor a term of office which will be distinguished by good service and will cheerfully direct attention at its conclusion to the good that has been done.

"Well done," may be truthfully and unqualifiedly written of Mr. Allen's service at the conclusion of his term.

Three Criminal Cases

Charles Becker, formerly Lieutenant of Police of New York City, was legally executed at Sing Sing prison shortly after sunrise last Friday morning. About Becker's guilt of the charge of having instigated the murder of the gambler, Herman Rosenthal there seems to exist little doubt, but so great was the power, even though dethroned and imprisoned, of the one time "Czar of the Tenderloin," and so skillful and experienced were his paid attorneys and advocates that justice was delayed for three years. During those three years, Becker and his relatives and friends lived in the torture of uncertainty.

Becker was not only compelled to give his life in expiation of his crime but he and his friends were tortured for three long years by the false hopes which long outlived forms of law held out to them.

Harry K. Thaw, after nine years of constant endeavor, by resorting to every known technicality which the present system of legal procedure affords and aided in his endeavor by an unlimited supply of money, is today a free man, although as to his guilt of the actual murder of Stanford White there never existed any doubt.

Freed of the charge of murder by a judgment of the Court declaring him insane Thaw is now freed by a judgment of a Court of law declaring him sane.

The two cases stand out prominently as illustrating that the present form of procedure in criminal law, in its uncertainties and its delays, is neither humane nor effective.

Punishment for the commission of a crime to be effective, to be merciful and to be humane must be commensurate with the crime committed, must be swift and must be certain.

The administration of the law, especially the criminal law, should be stripped of those technicalities which provide a chance for the guilty to escape. Such technicalities oftentimes thwart justice entirely and at others hold out a false promise to the guilty which is nothing short of a torture rivaling in its effect the most fiendish inventions of the medieval inquisition.

The Becker case and the Thaw case are ended and have become a part of the history of our criminal law.

There is another case, however—a criminal prosecution—just launched which promises to furnish another illustration of the impotency of the present form of procedure.

A little more than a week ago a thousand people lost their lives when the steamship Eastland turned over and sank in the Chicago river. The great majority of victims were helpless women and children.

That some one was guilty of the murder of the thousand victims of that disaster is unquestioned. Chicago and the nation were appalled at the magnitude of the crime and demanded vengeance, demanded that those guilty of the monstrous crime be punished. A number of arrests have been made. Coroner, county grand jury and federal court investigations have been begun and already an unseemly struggle for the exclusive right to proceed is on. Another one of those controversies, involving basis only in form, but which require so long to conclude that the real crime frequently goes unpunished is about the only present prospect.

A thousand human beings murdered in the heart of the second largest city of the nation and the authorities uncertain as to what tribunal is to proceed and how to proceed is a tragic testimony to the inefficiency of our system of criminal procedure.

Poetry For Today

THE LONG ROAD.

We are women together—my mother and me,
 With our eyes on the dull, gray past,
 And the pain she knows is the pain I see,
 For our ways are one at last.
 Oh, the roads were rough and the sharp winds tore
 As she battled fiercely ahead;
 And my brain grew sick and my heart grew sore,
 But I followed her whither she led.

For a mother's cry is a daughter's cry
 And the load is the same hard load
 And the mothers lag and the daughters fly
 'Till they meet on the flint-strewn road!

It was sweet to rush to her yielding breast,
 But it's better to clutch her hand,
 And we know our love is the love that's best—
 For both of us understand.

"Talk is cheap," observed the old fogey.
 "It is, eh?" exclaimed the grouch.

Our Own Fables.

Once upon a Time a Wise Guy decided that he would quit playing the Ponies. So, when the Meeting opened he kept away from the Track. But to Ease Off from the Habit, he picked out seven Horses, one in each Race, and bet himself Ten Bucks on each Nag to Win. And when he picked up the Dope Sheet the next morning every one of his Selections had a Ring around it. He had picked seven straight Winners, and a Ten Dollar Parlay would have netted him just $987,654,325,867,000. So the Wise Guy patted himself on the Back and said: "I'm getting good. I am Mr. Piker from Pikersville." So his Success brought the Yen for the Ponies on again, and the Wise Guy picked seven more winners and went over to the Track and played his Seven Selections right on the Nose. And every one of the seven Also Ran.

The governor telephoned the sheriff and learned that one man had been killed and several injured and that he could not handle the situation. Lieutenant Colonel Charles Hitchcock of Binghamton was ordered to the scene of the strike, and he will relieve Major Rice, who has been handling the situation.

Chicago, Aug. 2.—Waite investigation of the capsizing of the steamer Eastland rested over Sunday, divers recovered three more bodies from the wreck, making the total known dead $39.

Secretary of Commerce William C. Redfield and Solicitor A. L. Thurman promised to proceed with the investigation of steamboat inspectors according to legal requirements, despite the order of Federal Judge Landis that witnesses desired by the federal grand jury could not be heard before other investigators, and the adverse criticism that has been voiced against Secretary Redfield's inquiry.

A federal grand jury, instructed by Judge Landis to dig into every detail of the Eastland regardless of whom any finding might affect, resumed its examination of witnesses this morning.

YOUNGSTERS TAKE REFUGE IN CORN FIELDS OF PAINT

Sheriff Jones Sunday completed the work of placing three Paint township children in the County Home after a great deal of inconvenience due to the mother and the children hiding themselves from the Sheriff and his deputy.

Armed with an order committing to the county home the three children of Mrs. George Loveless, the Sheriff went to the home of Adam Huff, near Yatesville, where the mother and children were staying.

The mother and youngsters were in a nearby woodlot picking blackberries and when they spied the sheriff they scattered themselves in a cornfield, and it was not until a search of three hours had been made that the mother and two of the little fellows were found and brought to this city, the mother giving battle until she found further resistance fruitless. She was placed in the county infirmary and the two children in the county home.

The older of the three children had taken to the cornfield and made his escape. This was Saturday afternoon, and Sunday Sheriff Jones was notified that the lad was at Bookwalter. He went to that village but the boy discovered him in time to leap a fence and disappear in a corn field. After searching in vain for the boy, the sheriff returned to this city and left neighbors to keep him informed if the boy returned.

Late Sunday night word came that the boy was located, and when Sheriff Jones reached the village he was led to the home of one of the villagers and found the boy, fast asleep. It was near the midnight hour before he reached the county home with his charge.

George Loveless, father of the children, is in the State Hospital for the insane.

MONEY AND FOOD FLOOD INTO Y. M. C. A. MONDAY

More than fifty dollars in money and by check, and stocks of provisions that kept the Y. M. C. A. staff busy gathering up and storing away, flooded into the Y. M. C. A. Monday as a result of the appeal sent out by the churches of the city Sunday in behalf of the destitute and hungry families of striking Ohio miners.

A mass meeting on the court house lawn, attended by several hundred persons and addressed by the Rev. Wm. Boynton Gage from the steps of the Sharp memorial, contributed $27.50 to the collection which followed. Mr. Gage made a powerful supplication.

A special collection taken up at the Baptist church Sunday morning increased the fund $14.

A ten dollar check came in from Craig Bros. Monday morning and a dollar from an individual donor.

The purse at noon Monday was $67.50. It is expected that the money will be spent in Washington for provisions to be added to those donated here.

The prospect of sending a full carload of provisions from Washington is encouraging. The car will not be sent before Tuesday.

TORRIDITY LIFTS FOR A FEW HOURS

The intensely warm weather of the past several days lifted somewhat Sunday evening and until early Monday morning a cool wave came to refresh those suffering from the heat.

Sunday morning at six o'clock the mercury stood at 74, reaching 86 by the noon hour and 92 by two o'clock. Between two and three o'clock a cool breeze caused a drop of ten degrees. However, the mercury did not remain down any length of time and the high point shortly after three o'clock was 94 degrees.

Then came a gradual drop during the night, until three o'clock when the thermometer registered 70. By nine o'clock Monday morning the mercury was back to 80 degrees and still climbing.

LANDS BIG BASS IN NORTH FORK

Over on North Fork Robert Sanderson, enthusiastic member of the Fayette Fish and Game Association, tossed a well baited hook into a likely looking spot and instantly connected with a bass that carried the hook with the first wild dash fully fifty feet.

After a tussle, the bass was landed and over the official scales at Brown's Drug Store, the weight was 3 pounds and three and three-quarter ounces.

This weight is second in the standing in the competition for the prizes offered by the Association for the largest fish caught during the season, first place still being credited to Dr. O. D. Maddox, who weighed in a bass that scaled 3 pounds and 4 ounces taken several weeks ago from Flakes Fork.

KEEP ALL VEHICLES OUT OF THE ALLEYS

Chief of Police Moore requests that persons who have been in the habit of allowing vehicles, not in use, to stand in the alleys near their homes, please discontinue the practice.

The chief points out that alleys choked with vehicles, boxes, barrels, etc., are very difficult of passage in the event of fire. The chief will make an effort to open up all thoroughfares of the city.

GRAY BLOCK IS SOLD SATURDAY

The Gray block, located on Main street, Jeffersonville, was sold at Sheriff's sale Saturday afternoon at two o'clock, and was purchased by Arthur E. McCoy for the sum of $7,999.50.

The property was appraised at $10,000 and it is understood the Junior lodge has purchased a portion of the block to be used for a home with business room underneath.

ARRIVES IN CITY ON ANNIVERSARY

Just one year ago Sunday Prof. John D. Shoop, First Assistant Superintendent of schools in Chicago, who with his family arrived in this city Sunday evening, stood on the old battlefield of Waterloo and a few hours later was endeavoring, with thousands of other American tourists, to get out of Europe and back to America, war having been declared and the various nations of Europe thrown into a frenzy.

When he reached this city upon his return to America Prof. Shoop, in an interview with The Herald, predicted that the war would be a long and bloody one, and that it would be fought to a finish. How his predictions have been borne out up to the present time are told in letters of blood on the pages of world history.

CURB ALL LAID ON NEW PAVING

The curb has been laid on the Jeffersonville pike improvement and the paving is moving forward very nicely.

It is expected that the paving will now be rushed to completion as quickly as possible so that the road may be thrown open to traffic at as early a day as possible.

Until the improvement is completed, which will not be for several weeks, the road will continue to be closed to all traffic, and a detour by way of the Jamestown pike or Lewis pike is necessary.

TWELFTH STORY

PROLOGUE.

With wildly shrieking horn disturbing the very solitudes of the distant hills, and with pale and terror-stricken chauffeur bending over the wheel, the limousine of David Powers, millionaire lumber king, tore through the granite gateway of his beautiful residence and dashed madly along the shrub-bordered driveway toward the marble porch.

Powers himself—tyrant boss of a thousand underfed workmen—was on the steps. Anxiety was betrayed by every line of his working features.

Perry Travis, his legal adviser, was with him, and as the machine came to a sudden stop before them, its grinding wheels sending up a shower of fine stone and gravel, Powers was seen to pause and turn an instant toward the younger man as if for support.

He had heard the piercing, clanking notes of the horn long before the machine was in sight. He knew the temper of his men. He realized that his affairs were approaching a crisis. And he was afraid—afraid with the pitiful fear which comes over strong men when they realize that the confronting danger is of their own creation.

With trembling limbs the chauffeur climbed from his seat and averted his fear-distended eyes, as with unsteady hand he pointed to the broken window pane in the door of the handsome machine. The small round hole, with its pattern of radiating cracks, like a searred and shattered mirror, told its own story. Nothing but a bullet could have made a break like that.

Mastering his own emotion with supreme effort, Powers stepped toward the machine, and with firm hand—for his was a will of iron—he opened the door. From out of the luxurious interior he lifted the inert body of his beautiful daughter and pressed her to his bosom—a bosom that was racked and torn with partly stifled sobs.

Gently—gently as when she had been an infant some twenty years ago—he carried her into the house and tenderly—oh, so tenderly he placed her on a divan.

David Powers sank on one knee beside the cot, and then slowly his body seemed to shrivel and sag, much like a half-filled bag of meal, as with a complete surrender to grief he threw himself prone upon the floor and uttered the single word,

"Dead."

Travis stood silently beside the stricken father, unable to think or move. The young woman who lay there a victim to the wickedness that the tyranny of her father had stirred in the breasts of his workmen, had been his fiancée, and his sorrow was but little less than that of the agonized parent.

I.

David Powers was known as the man who never smiled during business hours. He was known as the man whose employees all feared him. He was known, too, as one of the most successful lumbermen in the business on the Pacific coast and all who knew him envied him. Stern, domineering, and with a genius for organization, he could get more work out of less men for smaller wages than any man in the state of California—that is, more than any man except one. And the man who excelled him as a driver of men, the man who could extract one more ounce of labor for one tithe less of wages was Jake Snyder, the chief foreman, pugnacious, hard as nails, flinty-hearted and entirely without sentiment.

Jake made an ideal driver for so exacting a boss as Powers. Watch him now on this morning several weeks before the shooting of Laura Powers. Watch him as he talks among the men there on the dock and on the boat. Note the feverish anxiety with which the men bend to their tasks when he glowers in their direction.

Powers had just driven up to his office in his high-powered six and had sent to Jake.

The millionaire was looking over the market column of the morning paper when his foreman entered and he never lifted his eyes from the absorbing sheet until the field commander had drawn his chair up close to his employer's desk.

There was no word of greeting between the men.

Pointing a pudgy finger first at the newspaper and then at the nose of his foreman, the millionaire spoke tersely and harshly:

"Lumber's high in the East, Jake. Drive your men to the limit and get that shipment east while prices hold up."

There was a grim cruelty in Jake's eyes and just a tinge of a smile on his firm, thin lips as he answered: "They're pretty near the limit now, but I guess we can speed 'em up a bit."

The ugly smile was still on Jake's face when he left the private office and on the steps of the building he paused for a moment, spat on his hands and squared his shoulders, as if enjoying the prospect of trouble that he sensed.

And, like most of those who look for trouble, Snyder found it. He had hardly left the docks to answer Powers' summons when Karl Hurd, delegate of face and hardly strong enough for the work he had been forced to accept, staggered back, dropped the piece of lumber he was handling and almost sank to the ground from sheer weariness. Too much work and not enough food was slowly killing him, and only the thought of his wife and daughter gave him strength enough to keep up.

Several of his fellow laborers came towards him and offered to help him. They talked with discontent over conditions that forced them to submit to the treatment that Jake and Powers meted out.

At a low warning shout from one of their number, all jumped to their places and were busy at work when Jake came around the corner of the nearest lumber pile—that is, all but Hurd.

"Here you, get to work and cut out that soldiering," yelled Snyder as he bounded across the low pile in Hurd's direction.

"Get to work now, not next week," he added as Hurd was slow in responding, emphasizing the words with a vicious kick.

Sudden, swift passion seized Hurd, and careless of all consequences—thoughtless as to what the future might hold for him—he lunged fiercely at his foreman, and struck him squarely between the eyes. His was the strength of desperation and the blow sent Jake reeling against the lumber pile.

The startled shout—half of amazement and half of approval—which greeted Hurd's action, as much as the sudden impact of doubled fist against human flesh, brought him quickly to his senses, and he stood for a moment staring at his dazed persecutor as the realization of what he had done was slowly impressing itself upon him.

And then fear seized him, and turning on his heel he fled—fled as if a thousand demons were after him—fled blindly up one lumber yard alley and down the other with the enraged Snyder, who had quickly recovered, dashing madly after him.

"Stop or I fire," yelled Jake, and then his revolver spoke—not once but three times in rapid succession, the vicious fire and the snipping bullets adding to the pandemonium that reigned in the lumber yard.

But Hurd fled blindly on.

Stumbling, plunging, falling and rising again, he raced across the rough, uneven ground, and reached the railroad tracks just as the interurban trolley bound for San Pedro whirled into view. With his last remaining ounce of strength, he made a desperate spurt and flung himself headlong on to the front platform of the rushing trolley. That he escaped death beneath the wheels was a miracle.

For just an instant Hurd lay prone upon the platform and then slowly drew himself up to a standing position. He was too relieved at his escape from immediate danger to give much thought to the fact that his job was probably gone—that he was out of employment. That a realization of his full plight would have come to him soon is possible, had not a sudden commotion in the interior of the car attracted his attention. Glancing through the glass door, he noticed Jake, the smoking revolver still in his hand, advancing along the center aisle of the car.

His face was working angrily and every line of his ugly countenance cried out for revenge. He had been crosed upon Hurd's heels in the mad race and a duplicate of the wild lunge that landed Hurd on the front platform had catapulted him on to the back one.

The Powers lumber yard lay in low ground just east of the trolley right of way, and at the instant that Hurd, glancing into the interior of the car, saw his pursuer advancing upon him, the car was swiftly moving onto a trestle that carried the trolley high into the air, over the lumber yard, and on toward the city.

It was a time for quick action, and Hurd was equal to the emergency. With a new strength born of his momentary respite, Karl gathered himself together for a spring, and murmuring a prayer for safety, he hurled himself fiercely from the swiftly moving trolley and landed on top of a towering lumber pile. As he lay winded and panting on top of the rude skyscraper, he saw Jake carried swiftly past him on the dashing trolley, shaking his fist at his escaped quarry in impotent rage.

Slowly, his fingers gripping desperately at the projecting boards, his feet unsteady and his head swimming, Hurd climbed down the side of the lumber pile that had been his temporary haven. It seemed ages before he reached the ground.

And then he came face to face with Snyder.

Like wild beasts the men glared at each other.

Slowly, cautiously they approached. Snyder's attitude was eager, expectant, Hurd's was desperate. Snyder swung his rude weapon easily, holding it ready. Hurd's fists were doubled. The two men closed.

Snyder, his intended blow blocked for the moment, found himself borne backward by the fierce rush of the other. He struggled with a determination worthy of a better cause. And his superior strength soon told.

Straining and panting he slowly forced Hurd to release his grip, and, shoving his opponent from him, he suddenly, with the swiftness of a man trained to such warfare, raised his club and sent it crashing down upon the skull of the underfed and poorly nourished stevedore.

Hurd dropped like a stone. He was done.

II.

"Wait until my birthday, Perry—it's only four months—and then perhaps—"

Laura Powers had gently withdrawn her soft white hand from the more masculine ones of Perry Travis and had gazed dreamily out across the well-trimmed lawns and beautiful gardens.

She was happy and pampered and indulged. She had reveled in a father's love—a love that amounted almost to worship. And now she knew that she had gained another man's love—the love of a man who was worthy and had her father's approval.

Small wonder that the days had flown swiftly. Small wonder that time had taken unto itself wings. And now her birthday was here. Already the guests were assembling. Already Perry was at the house, eager and impatient for his answer. And even yet Laura sometimes wondered just what that answer would be.

And Laura, while entering into the gaiety about her, yet found her mind frequently wandering away from her surroundings; found herself constantly trying to concentrate on the answer she was so soon to give Perry.

And then he came to greet her. Long and fondly he gazed into her eyes and unconsciously of her surroundings she let him hold her hand longer than was strictly necessary.

Quietly her father stepped up to where they stood.

"Friends," he said, "I wish to announce the engagement of my daughter Laura to Perry Travis."

The confused laugh and the pretty blushes that mantled her cheek, chasing themselves in telltale profusion up to the very roots of her wavy hair, were enough to tell those present that her father's words had not displeased her. Perry had his answer.

Just then, as if the fates were loth that happiness should reign supreme, there came an interruption. While the guests were crowding up and about Laura, the women kissing her and the men showering congratulations upon her, the servants were trying to keep a committee of workmen from entering at the gate.

Tim Shand was at their head—Tim the fiery—Tim the eloquent. For weeks now the men had been on strike. For weeks there had been turmoil and strife. For weeks there had been starvation in the homes of the strikers and destitution among the children of the workmen. Ever since the trouble between Snyder and Hurd the discontent of the men had grown. And then had come the last straw—the order given by Powers and enforced by Snyder—an order, working the men an hour longer each day and all day Sunday without extra pay. Even Snyder, tyrannical as he was known to be, had protested slightly at the latest outrage.

"The men'll never stand it," he had said.

"Times are hard and it must be done," Powers had answered.

"The men will strike," Snyder had ventured.

"Then we will get others," the millionaire had answered.

And so, going from group to group, Snyder had driven them harder, had shouted the new orders at them, had sought to coerce them into submission by a volley of filthy oaths.

Even the worm will turn, they say, and hungry, underpaid stevedores are less patient than the earth-grubbing insect. There were murmurs at Snyder's orders and open rebellion at his language. Just how it started nobody seemed to know; just who began it doesn't matter. Suffice to say that leaderless as the men were, impelled by a common instinct, they had suddenly rushed the rough-tongued foreman and had thrown him off the dock into the water. Then had come the march to the office, the demand for better pay, the clanging of the gate, the call for the police—and the strike.

Of all this not a word had reached Laura. Of all this not a whisper, not a suggestion had found its way behind the beautiful vine-covered stone wall that surrounded the Powers estate. Not a syllable had been permitted to disturb the peace and serenity of the millionaire's palatial residence, and probably never would have, if the men at an open air meeting on the afternoon of Laura's party, had not appointed Tim Shand the head of a committee to place their grievances before the millionaire.

"We can never get to him at his office. We will see him at his home," Tim had shouted.

At last Tim and the angry Powers came face to face.

For a moment the two men glared at each other. And then Shand, with the self-command and eloquence that had made him a leader among the workmen, quickly made his plea for justice.

"We come to you, Mr. Powers, because we realize that you do not know what the men have suffered. We know that if you had realized the awful tyranny of your underling, conditions would have been improved long ago. We ask you to take the men back under proper working conditions. And (this firmly), we ask the removal of Snyder. Not for ourselves alone, but for our wives and children we appear. They are starving."

"Let them starve," was Powers' answer.

Laura was a surprised and startled witness to this stirring scene. She had never realized before that there was such a thing as starvation.

A great compassion was born within her. Her features showed the dawn of a wondrous pity. Putting her arms about her father's neck she asked him to tell her all about the strikers and their hungry families. Laughingly he put her from him.

"Those problems are not for little girls like you," he told her. "Go and join your guests. They will miss you."

III.

Mina Hurd was a frail and delicate woman of twenty-five. A constant battle with poverty had left its marks. Far into each night she toiled with needle in a desperate endeavor to eke out the little family's slender income.

Bent over some hand-sewing, urging her weary fingers to unceasing endeavors to add to the slowly increasing pile of finished garments beside her, she hardly dared to raise her eyes from her work, when a commotion at the unpainted front door of the shabby cottage warned her that she was having visitors at an unusual time.

Two laborers appeared at the doorway supporting the half-unconscious Hurd between them. His head was covered with blood. His eyes were glassy. His feet shuffled and seemed too heavy for him to lift.

"Your husband's been hurt, ma'am," said one of the men, as guided by Mina, they half dragged, half carried the injured man to the scantily furnished bedroom and propped their stricken comrade in the shabby bed.

The happenings of the next few hours were as a dream to Mina. She had a hazy recollection that one of the men had called the kindly-faced and gentle Doctor Gray. She vaguely remembered having fed something to little Mina. She dimly sensed having helped Doctor Gray and one of the laborers dress her husband's wound. But from out the chaotic jumble of her tangled memory one thing stood bold and clear. It was the verdict of the doctor, spoken in gentle, kindly tones.

"Your husband has a severe injury to the skull. He cannot work for many weeks."

Followed days and weeks of desperate struggle for Mina, while Hurd slowly recovered his strength.

Came the day when Doctor Gray warned Mina that she would have to be careful.

"That cough will get you, little woman," he said as he kindly refused the money she proffered him.

"Hush, he will hear you," Mina whispered as she looked apprehensively towards the bedroom where Hurd had gone for his morning nap. His convalescence was slow and he needed all the rest he could get.

But her warning came too late. Hurd had caught the words and understood. In half an hour he was tottering from the house. In an hour he was at the gate of the lumber yard, asking to see his old antagonist. He was willing to risk another encounter with Snyder to save the health of Mina.

A new and surly gatekeeper barred the way.

And he tried to force his way past the burly bully. The scuffle was short and decisive. Hurd was thrown, limp and panting, up against the fence. He hadn't the strength of a half-grown boy.

So intently were the men watching each other that neither had heard the approach of Powers and his prospective son-in-law.

"What's the meaning of all this?" the latter asked.

"Please, Mr. Powers, I've come back to work. I've been laid up. I was hurt you know."

Recognition showed in the face of Travis.

"He's the man who assaulted Snyder," he said, turning towards the millionaire.

"You—you thug!" thundered Powers. "You can't work here. We have no place for disturbers like you. Get out."

Perhaps it was because of the anger aroused by his resentment against Hurd, perhaps it was because the increasing extravagances of Laura made him desperate to increase his income, perhaps it was only because of pure capriciousness, but at any rate Powers went straight from his encounter with his old employee at the gate to his office, sent for his worthy foreman, and issued the Sunday work order, that caused the strike and filled hundreds of homes with want and poverty and starvation. And all during the weary weeks of the unequal struggle between capital and labor Mina Hurd lay slowly dying, while her husband sat helplessly by, subsisting on the charity of friends and buying medicine with the money Doctor Gray forced upon him.

IV.

If Laura Powers had been less thoughtless—less selfish—if she had taken an interest in the condition of her father's employees before the afternoon of her interrupted Colonial party, this tale of hardship and privation, this story of tyranny and toil might never have been written.

The day after the party found her starting out alone on a mission of charity and exploration. All night long the word, "starving" had been ringing in her brain, and she meant to find out for herself if the wives and children of her father's striking employees were really suffering.

And now driving slowly through the streets formed by the cottages of her father's men, she gazed with sickening heart at the signs of misery and distress that multiplied on every hand around her.

One particularly pretty child, sobbing as if her little heart would break, attracted Laura's attention.

"And what is your name, my darling?" she asked tenderly.

"Betty Hurd," sobbed the child.

"And why are you crying?"

"My mamma's gone."

And following the persistent tug of the little one's hand Laura suffered herself to be led into Karl Hurd's house of sorrow and anguish; suffered herself to be led to the bedroom where the stricken husband, stunned by grief, sat staring down into the cold and sightless eyes of the wife who had offered herself on the altar of toil and tyranny.

Laura stooped to the little child, and gathering her in her arms she sought to give her some of that mother comfort she would never know again. Yielding to an impulse she opened her purse and poured its contents into the hand of the little one.

Easily influenced as children are, Betty grabbed the money from Laura's hand and running gayly to her father's side she tugged at his sleeve and lisped in her childish prattle:

"See what the lady gave me."

Dully Karl raised his pain-laden eyes and gazed dumbly at the pretty benefactor who stood at the foot of the bed in sorrowing embarrassment. Mutely he nodded his dumb thanks.

"I will be back to do what I can later," And Laura, sobered and chastened by what she had seen, slowly left that house of sorrow. But her unpleasant experiences were only beginning. Pandemonium reigned at the house three doors away—the house of Tim Shand—aggressive Tim Shand, champion of the men, and the spokesman of the committee that had bearded Powers in his own home at the Colonial party the day before.

Furniture was piled high on the sidewalk and men wearing the badges of the sheriff's office were carrying more of it into the street despite the violent protests of the wildly disheveled Mrs. Shand.

Laura's interest was aroused, less by the spectacle itself than by the fact, that Perry Travis, her fiancée and her father's legal adviser, was directing the work of the despoilers.

"And what does this mean, Perry?" she demanded in tones that compelled a prompt reply.

"These men are strikers. They must go. They won't work. We need the houses for others who will." His reply was jerky and stilted.

"But I thought these people had paid for their homes out of their wages," she persisted.

He remained silent, both to her question and to the insistent demands of Mrs. Shand, whose excitement and hysteria were growing with each passing moment.

"Answer me!" and Laura stamped her pretty foot in anger.

"They are only partly paid for." The answer came slowly. "They are only partly paid for, and as they remain in your father's possession until entirely cleared, and as the men are earning no money and cannot continue payment, we are foreclosing the mortgages. That is all."

"So you rob them of their homes. For shame. I'll stop that." And Laura, showing indignation in every pose of her dainty little body, hurried away to find her father.

An hour passed—an hour freighted with frightful portent for the actors in the tragedy of toil and tyranny that is rapidly nearing its final curtain. In that hour Laura had found her father, and with arms around his neck had begged him to have mercy. "You must take pity on your poor toilers, father," she had pleaded, and he had laughingly put her off. In that hour Mrs. Shand had stormed the meeting of the strikers in the vacant lot and had, in an impassioned plea of crude eloquence, lashed them into a fury for revenge. In that hour Karl Hurd, a vow for vengeance in his soul, had left the body of his dead wife and gone to join the maddened strikers.

Though he did not yet realize it, David Powers, for the first time in his life, had reached a point where events were getting beyond his control. A higher hand than his was dealing the cards. Fate had taken part in the game. And so it happened at the very moment that his daughter Laura had decided to slip from the house and go down herself and help the stricken families of her father's employees, the strikers themselves had decided to hold up her father's auto and give him the beating up they felt he so richly deserved.

Skillfully Shand disposed his forces at a point of vantage in a turn of the road just beyond the Powers mansion. The men were armed with clubs and at a point in the boulevard where they were hidden until the auto was almost upon them, logs were thrown across the highway. Hurd volunteered to act as lookout, and Shand, not knowing that the half-crazed and sorely stricken man had craftily stolen the revolver from his own side pocket, accepted his services. "Go up near the gate and signal us when the auto starts!" were his final instructions. And so the stage was set.

Slowly the limousine drew out from the Powers estate. The millionaire had drawn the shades to protect himself from the insults and gibes of his men on the streets and Laura had no bother to raise them. Out on to the road the machine swung and had just gathered full momentum when the chauffeur's heart was turned to stone by the orange tongue of flame that leaped from behind the trunk of a tree, by the ringing shot of a well-aimed gun, by the crash of glass as the body of the car behind him, and the mad maniacal peal of laughter that echoed wildly through the afternoon air. As he brought the auto to a quick turn he caught one glimpse of a pair of strangely staring, unblinking eyes that peered at him from behind the trunk of the grand old tree at the roadside.

David Powers was an influential man in the community where he lived. Police had guarded his palatial home all during the strike. They were near and when the shooting took place, and so it happened that the exulting grinning murderer was quickly caught and was dragged into Powers' library while the agonized millionaire, still the first burst of his awful grief, bending over the cold, dead form, his beautiful martyred daughter.

"Do with me what you will. I have had my revenge! The world has been less tyrant to oppress it," Hurd shouted. And then his eyes fell upon Powers.

ers. He started as if he had seen a ghost.

"You," he muttered weakly. "You, I thought—"

And then his eyes traveled slowly to the beautiful form on the couch.

"And she was kind to me," he sobbed. "She gave my Betty money. She wanted to help us and I killed her."

The words seemed to arouse Powers. For the first time he became conscious that he was not alone.

"You!" he shouted in his turn.

His eyes blazed fury and he made one infuriated leap at the manacled maniac before him. He would have killed the man with his bare hands had not the police and Travis restrained him.

And thus they stood a tragic group around the bier. And to each had been meted out his own appropriate punishment. Poor Laura had paid with her life. Travis had paid with loss of his fiancée—with the prospect of facing a blighted life until relieved by a merciful death. Hurd, in his wild pursuit of revenge, had paid by adding another sorrow, another remorse to his already overwhelming burden of woe. From David Powers had been exacted the greatest tribute. He paid with the life of his most precious possession—his daughter. For in the Tragedy of Tyranny and Toll, as in the other great tragedies of life, the weak must pay as well as the strong, the innocent as well as the guilty.

REDS HIT

Cincinnati, Aug. 2.—Hitting in the trenches and fielding faultlessly, the Reds had little trouble in twice beating Brooklyn, 4 to 2 and 6 to 3. Two bases on balls, a sacrifice, a stolen base and four singles scored four runs in the fourth inning of the second game, enough to win. Scores:

CASHIER AND CASH ARE GONE

Pretty Stenographer Fades Away About Same Time.

VILLAGE GOSSIPS LOOK WISE

See Coincidence In Disappearance of New Jersey Bank Official and Employee of Board of Trade—Shortage of $11,000 Discovered In Funds After Cornelius Started on Shopping Tour to Gotham.

Englewood, N. J., Aug. 2.—Abraham Cornelius, Jr., for many years cashier of the Citizens' National bank, a married man with a family, Miss Loretta Adelga, an attractive young stenographer, formerly employed in the bank, and $11,000 in cash from the bank's vault have been missing since Wednesday afternoon. There is no tangible evidence to show that Cornelius and the girl, for whom he is said to have had an infatuation for several years, have disappeared together, but Clinton H. Blake, president of the bank, and the girl's heartbroken mother, a widow, attach important significance to the fact that each vanished from Englewood about the same time.

Cornelius finished work at the bank as usual late Wednesday afternoon and boarded a trolley for New York. One of the bank's directors sat in the same seat with him and they chatted freely all the way.

The cashier said he intended to do some shopping in the city. Friday morning President Blake made certain of Cornelius' disappearance and the loss of $11,000 of the bank's money. It was then learned that the cashier had not returned from his "shopping" trip and that neither his family nor friends had seen him for several days.

Meanwhile the Englewood board of trade had been trying to trace the whereabouts of Miss Adelga, the board's stenographer. She had been employed three weeks ago at the earnest solicitation of Cornelius. On Wednesday afternoon she asked to leave the office early, as she had an engagement in New York. Then she sent a telegram to her mother at Rochelle Park saying the board would meet late Wednesday night and she would stay in Englewood with friends. The board had no meeting at all that night and the girl did not appear at her desk on Thursday morning. Her mother admitted her disappearance from home.

New York, Aug. 2.—Branches of the League to Enforce Peace will be formed in all the countries of Europe, including those at war, according to an announcement by the committee of information of the league. To that end, says the announcement, a committee of foreign organizations has been formed with Theodore Marburg, former American minister to Belgium, as chairman. This committee already has begun negotiations with a group of men in Great Britain, headed by Lord Bryce, and it is stated after the British branch has been organized others will be established in France, Holland and Italy.

The pedestal is in the center of the temple, that cost $250,000, and has been empty since the completion of the temple for lack of a statue fitting to grace the place of honor.

PLATE IS REMOVED

New York, Aug. 2.—Police officers of high rank held a conference at police headquarters and then, on their own initiative, went to the darkened room where the body of Charles Becker, who was put to death Friday morning for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, lay in a coffin, and removed from the coffin lid the small silver plate inscribed, "Charles Becker, murdered July 30, 1915, by Gov. Whitman."

Mrs. Becker did not interfere when the police officials told her that they intended to take the silver plate from coffin lid. The plate was brought down to police headquarters and locked in a desk. It will be kept there in case it is needed at any time as an exhibit in whatever legal action may or may not be contemplated. Inspector Faurot refused to discuss the removal of the plate at all, but from an authoritative source it was learned that the police had taken possession of the plate without prompting of any kind from Albany.

PLATE IS REMOVED

New York, Aug. 2.—Police officers of high rank held a conference at police headquarters and then, on their own initiative, went to the darkened room where the body of Charles Becker, who was put to death Friday morning for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, lay in a coffin, and removed from the coffin lid the small silver plate inscribed, "Charles Becker, murdered July 30, 1915, by Gov. Whitman."

Mrs. Becker did not interfere when the police officials told her that they intended to take the silver plate from coffin lid. The plate was brought down to police headquarters and locked in a desk. It will be kept there in case it is needed at any time as an exhibit in whatever legal action may or may not be contemplated. Inspector Faurot refused to discuss the removal of the plate at all, but from an authoritative source it was learned that the police had taken possession of the plate without prompting of any kind from Albany.

GOVERNMENT IS GUARDING LIVES AMERICAN BABIES

(Prepared by the Children's Bureau, U. S. Department of Labor.)

Washington, D. C., Aug. 2.—At this time of the year the trains and boats are carrying thousands of families to the seashore, the mountains, or the farms for their annual vacation from the hot and crowded cities.

Among the host of travelers are many young children. Indeed, it is chiefly on account of them that parents are willing to take all the trouble involved in the annual summer pilgrimage, the weariness of the journey and the many inconveniences of a temporary home.

They are, however, usually repaid by the increased health of the children and in the early weeks of September the trains are again filled with returning families of happy children whose sunburned cheeks, arms and legs, and irrepressible spirits show what tonic fingers in mountainside or country places.

Unfortunately, this is not always the case. Whether or not this change from city to country life is to be altogether beneficial or not depends upon the sort of living conditions into which the children will come, and upon the character of the milk supply and the drinking water.

In most cities, mothers, whether poor or rich, may have the benefit of carefully inspected milk and drinking water. In the country, it is a wise precaution to look into these matters before selecting the summer home. Flies and mosquitoes are two great enemies of the baby, affecting not merely his comfort, but endangering his health, and possibly his life. In going to the country, the mother should select, if possible, a place where the doors and windows and the porches are screened and one where water closets or some form of sanitary privy is in use. The latter improvements are not, necessarily, very expensive, and should be provided.

The prudent mother will include a bolt of cotton netting in the outfit she takes to the country in order that the baby's crib, at least, may be protected from insects. In going to a new place with a baby all the drinking water, and the milk, also, should be boiled, if from a strange supply about the cleanliness of which the mother knows nothing.

To travel comfortably with a baby, the first thing to be considered is his food. If the baby is breast fed no trouble will be experienced. For a bottle baby enough feeding must be prepared at home to last throughout the entire journey, unless the trip takes longer than twenty-four hours. It is best to sterilize the milk for this purpose as follows: Stand the filled bottles in a kettle over the fire and let the water boil about them for an hour and a half. After boiling, the bottles should be gradually cooled, and then made as cold as possible by standing them in a pail of cracked ice. They may then be packed in a small portable refrigerator. Many types of these have been devised and may be purchased. A portable ice-box may be made at home as follows:

Use two covered tin pails, one an inch or two smaller than the other, so that it may stand inside the larger pail. Fill the space between the two with sawdust; put the bottles with cracked ice in the inner pail and cover both tightly, and make a canvas or flannel cover for the whole.

To warm the bottle for the baby, the mother should provide herself with an enamelled ware pitcher holding a pint, which the porter will fill with warm water from the dining car. Set the bottle in it, after the water has cooled a little so that the sudden heat will not be sufficient to break the bottle.

The next most troublesome question on a long journey with a baby is how to take care of the diapers. A separate bag or basket lined with rubber sheeting should be provided for them, and with them may be packed a small enamelled ware chamber.

For a young baby a number of inner pads of soft paper or old cloth which can be destroyed should be provided. When one of these is soiled, wrap it up tightly in newspaper and throw it away. Wet diapers may be tightly rolled and kept in the rubber bag. The two most common mistakes made in traveling with children are with respect to their clothes and their food. In the hot summer weather, for a long journey, the little child should be dressed only in the sleeveless gauze shirt and diaper, with one thin outer garment. A sleeveless, low-necked slip of white chiefta silk is best, since it is much cooler than cotton, sheds the dust and can be washed out in the basin when soiled.

It is well to change the baby's clothing as soon as the journey begins, in order to have the regular outfit clean to put on when leaving the train. The little baby may go barefooted but an older child should have barefoot sandals to protect the feet from the cinders scattered over the floor.

Mothers should observe the same regular hours for feeding their children as at home. One of the worst things she can do is to give the baby cakes, candy, bananas, sweet crackers, and the like, as so many mothers do, to keep him quiet in the train. This kind of irregular feeding, with unsuitable foods, together with the heat of the train, and the fatigue and excitement of traveling are apt to upset the baby and make him irritable and restless.

SMALL AUDIENCE SEES FAST GAME

Dayton Shamrocks, One of the Best Teams in the Gem City, Shut Out—Hungeling Gets a Three-Sacker—Clintons Next!

The heat of Sunday afternoon kept a large portion of local fans from seeing what was undoubtedly the swiftest game of the present season at Athletic park.

The Athletics defeated the Dayton Shamrocks, 2 to 0, in just exactly 1 hour and 20 minutes, a record on the local diamond.

There was little actual excitement. Linson and Otey both pitched masterful ball and the game progressed throughout in "one—two—three" order.

Linson allowed but two hits, passed two and struck out ten men; Otey passed two, struck out four and allowed six hits.

Hungeling, prize backstop of the Athletics, bought admittance to Slugger's Hall with a long three bagger in the eighth. This was Hung's first real strong bid for swatting honors.

Shortstop Shank was the stellar performer with the Shamrocks. His work was unusual.

Ninety degrees of temperature did not allow of much pep on either side but there was little slumber. Duplicating their performance of the last Wilmington game, the Athletics went through without an error. Dayton had but two.

Ross umpired without criticism. The decrease in attendance put the Athletics about twenty dollars in the hole.

The faithful fans were well pleased with the Shamrocks who will probably be brought back before the close of the season.

As it now lines up, it is generally conceded that Washington has the best ball team in its history and a little support from the fans will keep it right there.

The Athletics play the rub at Wilmington next Sunday. The box score of Sunday's game follows:
